Yanks Check Reds' Drive Over the Kum; GIs Will Hold Korea, Army Chief Says

White House Will Request Controls as 'De-Boomer'

Middle-Road Policy Of Time Payment Curbs, Allocation Of Steel Indicated

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Economic controls, probably framed on a "middle course" policy, will soon be requested by the Administration in order to handle the effect of an anticipated increase in military spending of more than five billion dollars.

No final decision on the precise nature of the controls or of the authority to be requested of Congress has yet been reached. It cannot be, until it is decided how much more money is to be asked for in a supplementary appropriation. And this, in turn, awaits an evaluation of the report of Generals Collins and Vandenberg, just back from the Far East.

Their reports, and the resulting spending and control decisions, however, are expected within the next two weeks. It is not known whether President Truman will present them to Congress in a personal appearance at a joint session, or via special messages and reports.

At About Midway Point

Meantime, however, Cabinet members and White House advisers seem to be concentrating on control measures and policy about midway between two extreme positions. It is probable, therefore, that the President will propose an economic mobilization and inflation control program containing these elements:

1. Power to allocate raw materials directly to producers of military orders. For the time being, this power would be applied almost exclusively to steel, the most vital item and the one where the pressure of demand is presently the greatest.

2. Power to issue limitation orders on certain types of manufacturing, as for instance automobiles, television sets and other durable consumer goods. The purpose of such orders would be to reduce the demand by these manufacturers for steel and other scarce raw materials.

3. Restoration of controls on installment buying, which expired just a year ago. The purpose is to cut down civilian demand in the

Tire Buyers Told They're Wasting Time

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

Tire hoarders with an eye on the Korean headlines are wasting their time, a top Government rubber expert said yesterday.

"In the first place there is now no shortage at the manufacturing level," Gerald B. Hadlock, executive director of the RFC's Office of Rubber Reserve explained. "Every plant is running all-out."

"In the event of a real national emergency, tires aren't going to do these hoarders a bit of good," he continued, "because gasoline will be tightly rationed. Where are they going to go on their new tires? Exactly nowhere."

"And a cellar full of tires isn't going to put anyone in an advantageous position, Hadlock said. "We took tires away from 'patriots' in the last war and we'll do it again if we have to."

Hadlock's warning found Washington in a dizzy tire-buying spree. Tire dealers reported business had increased 150 percent in the

No Shortage Of Sugar Due, Experts Warn

Stocks Huge, Big Crops In Prospect, So 'Don't Rock Boat,' U. S. Says

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Reports of widespread panicky buying of sugar, not only in Washington, but all over the United States, caused Government sugar experts yesterday to sound this warning:

"Don't rock the boat. There is no danger of a sugar shortage."

In fact, figures in the sugar branch of the Agriculture Department indicate there is enough sugar so every one of the country's 40 million families could stock 100 pounds of sugar and there still would be plenty available.

There is one danger, however, if the scare buying continues. That is that the refining and distribution facilities may become temporarily overburdened, resulting in artificial shortages in some localities. But there is plenty of sugar in the country or available nearby.

Only last week Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan raised the sugar quota for American consumers to 7,850,000 tons. Consumption was about 7,580,000 tons in 1949. Distribution in 1948 was 7,343,000 tons. That was the first full year after wartime rationing was removed in 1947.

Other Supplies Available

Even if these huge supplies became exhausted, here is what is available:

Cuba, about 850,000 tons, 400,000 of which is already earmarked for American use. The other 450,000 tons has not yet been allotted by the Cuban government. In addition, there is 200,000 tons earmarked for "world sale" that would become available for the United States if necessary.

Puerto Rico: A surplus of about 140,000 tons, available on virtually a moment's notice.

Hawaii: Another 125,000 tons, which could be got almost overnight.

As if this isn't enough, the indications are for unusually large crops this fall. Reports from Cuba indicate the biggest crop in history is in prospect this winter.

Last week the Crop Reporting Board had this to say about domestic crops:

1. "Sugar beet production in the United States this year is now

New Arms Delivered To Front

Collins Confident, But Task 'Not Easy'; Truman Confers With Defense Heads

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

American forces will hold an "extensive bridgehead" in Korea and "eventually" throw back the Communist forces, Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, predicted confidently late yesterday.

Back from an inspection trip of the Korean front and talks with Gen. Douglas MacArthur, the Army chief disclosed that new antitank weapons and tanks have been delivered to the South Korean defenders.

He hinted that some even more powerful weapons soon will be on the way to help stop the Russian-made tanks that have been giving the American fighters such a bad time.

Collins and Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, talked with reporters at a special Pentagon briefing after giving President Truman a detailed account of their front-line inspection. They had returned early yesterday morning from Japan.

"Not the Slightest Doubt"

"While it will not be an easy task," Collins told reporters, "I have not the slightest doubt in the world that we shall hold an extensive area in Korea," adding he was confident the situation could be stabilized and eventually "those people can be driven back."

Collins said he was greatly impressed with the "calm and confidence" among American troops in Korea.

Troop and Air Force morale, they said, is "extremely high."

"Completely Erroneous"

"Any idea that these troops have not handled themselves well is completely erroneous," Collins said. He explained that during the initial phases, officers and men, with relatively light weapons, sometimes dealt with enemy tanks singlehandedly.

(Collins refused to comment directly on Representative James E. Van Zandt's statement the United States "may have to evacuate Korea within the next 72 hours.")

"There is no question but that we are up against tough opposition, well trained and well fed," Collins said. "But I am equally confident that the situation can be stabilized before very long.

Foe Widens Bridgehead Near Taejon In 5-Mi. Push

No Tanks Yet Seen Across Key River; Navy Landing Party Stalls Invaders

Tokyo (Sunday), July 16 (AP).—United States infantry, supported by around-the-clock bombing, checked the North Korean lunge across the Kum River near strategic Taejon in heavy fighting today.

Field dispatches said the Communists attempted to build up their forces south of the river, but a number of patrols were thrown back by an alert American defense.

The North Koreans were acknowledged earlier to have enlarged their bridgehead on the south bank of the Kum about 20 miles northwest of Taejon and on the American left flank. Field dispatches indicated the Communists have advanced five miles from this river point and are about 15 miles west of Taejon.

A headquarters spokesman with the U. S. Eighth Army described the Communist attacks as "strong." Presumably he referred to Red attempts to break out from the bridgehead and overrun Taejon and its airfield.

There still was no evidence that the Northerners had moved tanks across the Kum, said Associated Press Correspondent William R. Moore. Tanks have spearheaded the North Korean invasion from the outset.

Intense aerial assaults were believed to have disrupted enemy attempts to bolster the bridgehead, Moore said. Another front dispatch said United States air strikes on targets along the north bank had touched off 18 fires.

One flamed 100 feet into the air. It was believed to have been a supply dump. Night bombers lashed at two concentrations of North Korean tanks north of the Kum.

An Eighth Army spokesman announced that a naval party landed on South Korea's east coast, created a landslide with demolitions about 90 miles north of the important port of Pusan, and withdrew.

Stalled Communist truck columns then were shelled from the sea. This was the first report of an Allied naval landing. Whether Tokyo, Sunday, July 16 (AP).—General MacArthur announced today that United States naval planes have begun aerial reconnaissance of the south China sea coast and Nationalist Formosa.

A brief announcement said United States Seventh Fleet planes had been sent aloft to assist in preventing a Chinese Communist attack from Formosa.

It said the aerial operations also were to prevent any air or sea operations by the Nationalists against the Communist mainland.

Six Citations For Contempt To Be Sought

House Red Probers Name 3 in D. C. Who Balked at Questions

The House Committee on Un-American Activities said yesterday it will seek contempt of Congress citations against six persons—including three Washingtonians—who refused to answer questions about Communist activites.

Chairman Wood (D., Ga.) said the committee will bring the cases before the House for action as soon as they can be prepared.

The three Washingtonians, who appeared before the committee last summer in its investigation of communism in the District, are:

Bella Rodman, social worker.

Pasquale Leonard James Branca, drug company salesman.

Elizabeth Sasuly, who at the time she testified was legislative director here for the Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers of America, since expelled from the CIO.

Also named were:

Clarence Hiskey, identified as a professor at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute and described by the committee as an associate of a known atomic spy for Russia.

MacArthur Lifts Ban Army Put On 2 American War Reporters

Tokyo (Sunday), July 16 (AP).—The Army barred two United States correspondents from the South Korean front yesterday but General MacArthur lifted the ban today.

MacArthur told Tom Lambert of the Associated Press and Peter Kalischer of the United Press to go back to the war, adding that he had full confidence in their judgment on future war coverage.

MacArthur said also he was lifting the ban because both were old friends of his.

Yesterday United States military officials abruptly notified Lambert and Kalischer that they could not return to Korea.

Shortly after the ban was imposed, an officer high in General MacArthur's headquarters said Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker, commander of the Allied forces in Korea, had been given authority to apply military censorship over correspondents in the war area.

The officer, who declined the use of his name, said the question was being studied by General Walker's field headquarters.

Many correspondents have requested formal censorship as a means of helping clear away the confusion attendant on trying to report the Korean campaign.

Lambert was halted as he was about to board a bus in Japan to start a return trip to Korea. He had been in Tokyo for a brief rest.

Col. M. P. Echols, General MacArthur's public information officer, said the action was taken because some of the material in Lambert's dispatches has given "aid and comfort to the enemy."

The text of the MacArthur headquarters message as given out by Army information officials in Washington, said:

"This is to inform you that Tom Lambert, Associated Press, and Peter Kalischer, United Press, have been denied reentry into Korea because of continued failure to observe discretion or cooperation in a dispatch of their files. They are guilty of disclosing information that would be of value to the enemy and would have a bad morale and psychological effect on our own troops who are now engaged in a very serious combat. Richmond, Va., July 15 (AP).—A Lithuanian family which tried to live in Richmond on $34 a week will return to Europe.

Fourteen-year-old Ronald Dietze said they fear Russia may enter the Korean war and that Europe will be a safer place to live than America.

Mrs. Maria Dietze, Mrs. Anna Pippers and Ronald arrived in Richmond last September 10. Mrs. Dietze worked in a hat factory and earned $28 a week. Ronald delivered newspapers after school and cleared about $6 a week.

Ronald's father died in the last war while serving on a German torpedo boat. His younger brother died from starvation when the family was forced to flee the Russians moving on Lithuania. The family will sail from New York on July 24.

Stalin Sends Nehru Reply On Korea War

Contents of Answer To Offer to Mediate Are Not Disclosed

Moscow, July 15 (AP).—Prime Minister Stalin made his first statement on the Korean fighting today in a personal message to Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru. Contents of the note were not disclosed.

Nehru, who has announced his willingness to serve as a mediator in the Korean conflict, sent a personal note to Stalin Thursday. The reply was handed to Dr. R. Radakrishman, Indian Ambassador to Moscow, by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

The Indian Embassy issued a statement this afternoon saying:

"The Indian Ambassador was requested to call at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at 3:30 p. m. today. Mr. Gromyko delivered to him a letter from Generalissimo Stalin to the Prime Minister of India."

Before the Indian Embassy issued its statement, there had been a growing belief in foreign circles here that the Soviet Union would like to discuss the entire Far Eastern question. This would include Korea, Formosa, and Indo-China.

Thought To Want Accord

During the week foreign diplomats had expressed the opinion that the Soviet Union wants to see a peaceful settlement of the Korean conflict. At that time they said Russia's price for such a settlement probably would be the withdrawal of American troops and any other foreign troops from the Korean Peninsula. The Soviets also were said to want general elections in both North and South Korea to pick a single government for the whole peninsula.

A personal message from Nehru also went to United States Secretary of State Dean Acheson Thurs-

Sheriff Runs Slot Machines, 'Numbers' Firm, Senators Told

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Miami, July 15.—The Senate Crime Investigating Committee today brought to light two major facts in connection with gambling in south Florida:

1. The Sheriff of Broward County, locale of notorious gambling spots, is a partner in a firm controlling slot and pinball machines and involved in bolita, a form of the numbers game. His income from the firm tops what he receives as sheriff.

2. The S. and G. syndicate which controls gambling at swank Miami Beach reported 1948 income of $26,520,045 but the Government is now claiming it didn't pay enough taxes.

The sheriff is Walter R. Clark, a hulking man who testified he had heard only "rumors" of gambling in his county. It is the site of Colonial Inn, Club Boheme and Green Acres Club, all owned by northern racketeers including Frank Erickson, the bookie now serving a jail term.

Chairman Kefauver (D., Tenn.) revealed that the tax return of the Broward Novelty Co. showed Clark, his brother and another man as the owners. The sheriff received $12,910 from the firm in 1945, $20,670 in 1946 and $8000 in 1947, Kefauver said. Clark admitted the figures sounded "right" but he contended he thought the firm sold only cigarette machines.

The tax return listed "bolita sales" totaling over $750,000 for the three years. Bolita is a game in which a winning number is drawn from 100 or more numbered balls in a bag. It also paid Federal taxes on slot machines.

Clark listed his investments at length, but didn't mention the firm until Kefauver disclosed it. He said he was in a cigarette machine business.

He is the same Sheriff Clark who recently was revealed by another Senate committee to have had an interest in a now-bankrupt firm into which the Reconstruction Finance Corp. poured more than $300,000. He was characterized then as a "friend" of President Truman. That deal was referred to briefly today.

Nurse, 61, Seized for Drinking, Had $17,586 in Her Handbag

Police will be much happier if Sarah Ann Hallenback, 61, a practical nurse, regains her faith in banking institutions.

They do not like the idea of citizens walking the streets with more than $17,000 in their pocketbooks.

Miss Hallenback, who forfeited $25 collateral when she failed to appear in Municipal Court yesterday to answer a charge of drunk and disorderly conduct, was carrying $17,586 in cash in her handbag when arrested last Sunday at 33d and N sts. nw.

The money came to light when a routine search was made at the Women's Bureau. Miss Hallenback, who told police she had been working as a practical nurse in a Georgetown home, said she had saved the money from her earnings over a period of years. The sum also included cash from a legacy, she said.

Why was she carrying such a large sum? The lady, according to police, doesn't completely trust banks although she admitted she keeps some cash in banks.

Reached by telephone yesterday, Miss Hallenback indicated she may let the banks take over the job of guarding her hoard.

"But it's my money and what I do with it is my business," she announced firmly.

Two Area Residents Are Killed In Head-On Crash in Delaware

Two persons from the Washington area were killed and eight injured when two automobiles collided head-on at 12:45 p. m. yesterday on Route 404, two miles southeast of Bridgeville, Del.

Dead were:

Mrs. Marion Clery-Melin, 27, of 3408 Garrison st. nw., wife of a French military attache.

Mary Joyce Lynn, 4, of 1513 Jenifer st., Michigan Park Hills, Md.

Delaware State Police said Mrs. Clery-Melin died almost instantly of a broken neck when the cars crashed on the rain-slicked highway. The child died of a fractured skull a short time after being admitted to Milford Memorial Hospital where all of the injured were taken.

The child was riding in a car headed for Rehoboth Beach, Del., and operated by Joyce O. Frenzel, 49, a boilermaker, of 3000 Vista st. ne. He suffered multiple lacerations and contusions.

Also in Frenzel's car were his wife, Lillian, 48, whose injuries included a fractured left wrist, fractured right ankle and fractured pelvis, and their daughter and her husband, the dead child's parents, Joseph W. Lynn, 31, and Mrs. Jacqueline Lynn, 28.

2 of 4 Engines Bring Giant Mars In From Pacific

San Francisco, July 15 (AP).—The 82½-ton Caroline Mars—world's largest operational flying boat—won a dramatic 480-mile flight against disaster over the Pacific tonight, arriving at 6:17 p.m. (PDT) from Honolulu on only two engines. Both were on the right side—and one of them was faulty.

Her nerve-tingling arrival at Alameda Naval Air Station meant safety for 15 crewmen and 3 Navy passengers who only 80 miles out faced the risk of going down on a Pacific with a five-foot crest.

That was the time when the third engine, put to a strain to help make up loss of both 3000-horsepower engines on the left side, began to sputter.

The plane recently drew Nation-wide attention by flying 144 men the 2609 miles from Honolulu to San Diego, a record load for such an over-water attempt.

The 200-foot wing ship dipped ever lower from an original altitude of 7000 feet to one of only a scant 1000.

Rescue planes, prepared to drop life rafts by parachutes, flew alongside on the last leg. Below, a Navy cutter had appeared, ready to move up quickly and take the giant in tow.

Yank Troops Check Red Drive Over Kum

the landing party was American or British was not indicated.

North of the Kum to the west of Taejon, field dispatches said, Communist troops were reported moving southward unopposed. Their numbers were not known.

Their route leads south to the Kum River estuary and its port of Kunsan, on the south bank 45 miles southwest of Taejon.

South Koreans Yield

While the Americans were holding along the south bank of the Kum, the South Korean Army on the east flank had to yield some ground.

The South Koreans are fighting doggedly, however, and so far have kept the invaders from reaching the Kum River. A break across the river here might put the Reds in the rear of the American positions north and west of Taejon.

Moore said the Communists attacking the United States lines northwest of Taejon threw in artillery and possibly self-propelled guns. American artillery returned the fire. It was believed that every new crossing attempt was crushed.

The North Korean Reds, who launched their surprise invasion of South Korea just three weeks ago today, were using every trick at their command—including night-striking guerillas clad in American fatigue uniforms or disguised as civilians.

Whether their flanking drives against Taejon will succeed may become clear within 24 hours, front-line dispatches said.

The situation in the vital sector west and northwest of Taejon was described as "fluid" by General MacArthur's communique early Sunday. Headquarters conceded the North Korean bridgehead, at an undisclosed place west of Taejon, "remained intact despite heavy losses."

Red Tanks Knocked Out

Associated Press Correspondent William R. Moore reported from field headquarters that the Reds had pushed back the American left flank "somewhere west of Taejon" in hard fighting.

Extent of enemy losses was not detailed, but United States artillery and mortars pumped a stream of fire into the invaders scrambling into position. Small arms fire joined in the deadly reception.

Overhead, American and Australian fighters and United States light bombers swept low in repeated strafing runs on the enemy. Planes knocked out at least four Red tanks and possibly 10 more, an Army field spokesman said.

The North Koreans reponsed with 76-millimeter artillery fire, apparently from self-propelled units north of the river.

A spokesman at American advanced headquarters said Saturday night that no Communist tanks had been observed south of the Kum River, but some were seen on two north-south roads west of Taejon.

This apparently meant that Red tanks had not been able to cross the shallow river barrier to reinforce the main North Korean bridgehead, but were swinging in from a point farther west. Allied air strikes knocked out four Red tanks and possibly 10 more, an Army spokesman said.

Associated Press Correspondent Moore reported from advanced American headquarters there was "no reason to believe the invaders have lost the power to keep their tank columns in motion when they are ready to do so."

Moore pointed out the North Koreans still outnumbered the defenders by long odds. Enemy strategy appeared to be one of spreading out wide to thin the defense line, then pressing in from both left and right flanks.

Whether the Communists would attempt to overrun Taejon's defenders or bypass the city of more than 100,000 persons was not yet clear.

The left flank, held on the west by American forces, was turned by Communist soldiers who infiltrated across the Kum Friday night. They were dressed as civilians or wore American light-green combat fatigues.

In surprise raids on American units under cover of darkness they caused some loss of United States artillery positions.

The defense dropped back to new positions, blowing bridges and dynamiting roads as they retired.

The crossings apparently were in the vicinity of Samygo, 20 miles northwest of Taejon.

On the right flank, north of Taejon and north of the Kum River, South Koreans nearest to the American sector were forced back to higher ground by the impact of the Red flanking drive.

Cables Snag Planes

Again, speedy jets and Mustangs came, supported the defenders, slashing in for low-level attacks on Red armor.

Several United States pilots reported running into wire cables strung acros snarrow valleys. In one instance a light bomber struck a cable while diving on a Communist tank. The pilot brought his damaged plane back with strands of heavy steel wire wrapped around his wing tip.

In most cases, the cables appeared to be part of prewar commercial lumber operations.

MacArthur's Sunday morning communique, which usually runs behind field accounts, placed the South Korean withdrawal along the Chongju-Koesan sector. Koesan is 20 miles northeast of Chongju, which in turn is 22 miles north of Jaejon. Headquarters said the withdrawal was "limited," but did not indicate where new positions had been established.

The South Korean forces hold what MacArthur terms the center sector of the entire front line. The line now runs some 80 miles from a point west of Taejon north and east to the Taebed Mountain range.

At the extreme east end of this line, the North Korean Fifteenth Division continued to advance about 20 miles southeast of Chungju, and the Reds' Fifth Division drove southeast along the Tanyang-Yonju axis.

It is here that Communist forces are attempting to break through rugged mountain country to cut the American supply line running from Pusan on the southeast coast to Taejon.

Along the coast, MacArthur said, warships "materially assisted" in keeping enemy activity on a small scale. North Korean troops trying to push south along the east coast were identified as part of the North Korean's First Border Constabulary Brigade.

It was this brigade that frequently clashed with South Korean patrols along the thirty-eighth parallel prior to the invasion by the North June 25.

did an exceptionally fine job. Sure they were green. They were not freed from occupation duties until six months ago when we began training them and bringing them up to strength."

The defense heads sought to minimize reports that bazookas and aircraft rockets were bouncing off Communist tanks.

At the same time, Collins made it clear the North Korean tank columns were the big problem.

"We have flown over by air and now have in the hands of the troops weapons which I think will be effective against these tanks," he said.

A reporter asked Collins if the new antitank weapons included supercharges. The general replied he could not give any details. "The weapons are not the very latest we are developing," he said.

He added quickly he was not "positive the new ammunition is there yet, but I am confident it will be soon."

Collins was asked about the size of enemy tanks. He said the Army mostly has been up against medium and light tanks.

Other Pentagon officials said they have no confirmation that enemy forces have thrown in 50 and 60-ton tanks as has been reported in news dispatches.

Vandenberg seconded Collins' confidence that brighter war news lies ahead.

Despite reports to the contrary, the air chief said aircraft rockets are bouncing off tanks only in the rare incidents when they are flying "on the deck" and the missile strikes the sloped front of a tank.

He praised the F-80 jets as "battleworthy" planes whose rockets have knocked out tanks and thrown light locomotives completely off their tracks. Many bridges also have been put out of use by the F-80s, he said.

Vandenberg had special praise for the striking effectiveness of the Napalm fire bombs against tanks. They have been "most successful . . . They destroy the crew and burn out the ignition systems of the tanks, if nothing else," he said.

Stories that F-80's "go so fast they can't distinguish targets on the ground," Vandenberg said "just aren't true."

He disclosed that the first flight of B-29 reinforcements for Korea totaled 58 planes, plus equipment and supplies. Nine days after they were alerted, he said, 57 of the 58 made a strike against a railroad marshaling yard.

Hoping for a break in the bad weather, Vandenberg explained that air operations in the battle area are conducted under 100 and 200-foot ceilings—"and not just in isolated cases."

He said elements of the Fifth Air Force were operating from two advance bases in Korea.

The Air Force general had warm words also for the wives of pilots in Japan. Their morale, he said, was "extremely high." This comment was aimed to spike reports to the contrary.

The briefing session with President Truman took place at Blair House. Mr. Truman did not appear outside after the conference broke up and the defense chieftains left.

A crowd of more than 300 bystanders stood in front of Blair House while the session was under way.

English-Speaking Korean Red Tricks GI Into Deadly Ambush

By Marguerite Higgins

With American Forces in Korea (Sunday), July 16 (NYHT).—The Communists who attacked and overran American gun positions early yesterday on the Kum River front not only were dressed in American fatigue uniforms but were led by English-speaking officers who pretended the troops were South Korean allies of the Americans.

This was recounted by American survivors of the fighting. Telling of the trickery, Lieut. MacDonald Martin, of Atlanta, Ga., described the assault:

"The Koreans, dressed in American G.I. fatigues, came running down the hill toward our positions shouting 'Don't fire! Don't fire! We are friends.' We did not find out differently until they were right in among us and started shooting point blank."

It appears almost every Communist company in contact with the Americans has at least one English-speaking soldier.

"They are always shouting across the lines or down the hills things like, 'Why don't you go home, Joe? What are you fighting for anyway?'" Martin said.

"Go Ahead Soldier"

Pfc. Robert Cunningham, 18, of Miller City, Iowa, told how a Communist, masquerading as a South Korean officer, managed a machine-gun ambush of five American vehicles.

"It happened about 9 o'clock at night," Cunningham said. "Me and my buddy were jeeping to the motor company with a message when we were fired on. We took off into the rice paddies leaving the jeep in the road. My buddy was wounded, but I could poke my head up.

"I saw what looked like a Korean officer pulled up at the head of our jeep and pretending to be looking at the motor. When an American car came by the Korean would slow them down a little bit and then wave them by the jeep shouting good naturedly 'Go ahead, soldier.'

"Hiding behind the jeep on the other side of the road was a machine-gun nest which opened up as soon as we started by. They wounded guys in at least three jeeploads. We finally got the machine-gun nest when the medics, who wanted to come back and get the wounded, went back and got a tank to protect them."

No Ordinary Cuckoo

The North Korean "cuckoo" signals from the hills have been an unnerving part of the North Korean psychological warfare because they tell the Americans how closely they are being watched.

"This cuckoo is no ordinary cuckoo," explained Martin. "He cuckoos every time you change your position, or bring in a new gun, or move your C. P. (command post). He cuckoos when you dig some trenches or send a reconnaissance patrol up front. This cuckoo sound echoes round the hill at the front when a Korean wants us to know when they are watching."

One of the most irritating events of the war for Martin was the signal given yesterday by the North Koreans for their attack. It was the word "victory" spoken in English.

Burmese Now Fighting China Nationalist Troops

Rangoon, July 15. (U.P.)—Burmese troops are fighting a group of Chinese Nationalist troops who crossed into Burmese territory last month in the southern Shan States.

The government said the Burmese were driving the Chinese back toward the frontier near the border of Burma and Thailand.

U. N. Weighs Formation of Korea Legion

Lake Success, July 15 (AP).—Top-ranking United Nations officials are considering seriously formation of a volunteer international legion to throw into the Korean fighting in support of General MacArthur, it was learned tonight.

The disclosure came as the U. N. waited for concrete offers of aid from non-Communist members in answer to U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie's urgent appeal for help sent out to 52 nations yesterday.

There has been no positive response yet. None is expected until cabinet meetings can be held and each country can determine specifically what it could send—fighting men, food or equipment.

Some observers said only about 25 countries could respond to the appeal in a substantial way.

The Latin American delegations are to caucus Monday to discuss the situation again. They reached no conclusions at a hurriedly called meeting last night.

A number of questions have caused the U. N. to go slow on the international legion idea, born in high secretariat levels a week ago. A U. N. source familar with the subject indicated that it has been discussed with the United States delegation and that it may be already in the hands of Gen. MacArthur for final judgment.

One go-slow reason is that the U. N. does not want to impair the effectiveness of aid from the members. Nations joining the collective police action against the North Korean Communist invaders are still considered the best military bet. Setting up a separate U. N. brigade as such would detract from national units fighting under the U. N. flag, some secretariat planners believed.

War Blows by Jets Hailed by Stratemeyer

Tokyo, July 15 (AP). — The Air Force's F-80 Shooting Star jet planes have "accounted for 85 percent of North Korean vehicle and materiel losses," the Far East Air Forces commander said today.

Lieut. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer praised the speedy fighters in a statement following battlefield reports that the jets were too fast for ground strafing or coping with the Russian-made Yak fighters used by Communist North Korean forces.

"Rockets and machinegun fire from F-80s has blown up more tanks, trucks and other equipment than all other types of air attack combined," Stratemeyer said.

He credited the jets with having flown "70 percent of all the combat sorties."

The F-80s, Stratemeyer said, have done almost everything in Korea except the high altitude fighting they were originally designed to do.

"Lately I've heard an occasional rumor that our jets haven't lived up to expectations," the general said. "The fact is, nothing could be farther from the truth."

"Before we got into the fight with North Korea there might have been some argument about the jets, with their 600-mile-an-hour speed and relatively short number of hours in the air on one flight, would not be well suited to ground strafing and rocket attacks. . . ."

General MacArthur's headquarters credited four Australian Mustang fighter planes with upsetting a North Korean attempt Friday to cross the Kum River. The announcement did not say where the action occurred.

The Australian airment also strafed Communist road transport and hit several bridges.

Korean Red Losses Put at 8000 to 9000

The Army yesterday said North Korean casualties are estimated between 8000 and 9000 up to Thursday.

In the same period, since the opening of hostilities, Gen. Douglas MacArthur has announced that American casualties were less than 500.

An Army spokesman said the figure for Red Korean losses probably contains some margin of error, but that it is "pretty close to the truth."

The Army revealed that the original estimate of North Korean tanks should have been about 300. Immediately after the outbreak of fighting in Korea, officers here placed the figure at about 100.

First District War Casualty

LT. HOWELL G. THOMAS, JR.
. . . wounded in Korea

Army Second Lieut. Howell G. Thomas, jr., 23, of 3449 17th st. nw., was listed by the Defense Department yesterday as the first area man to be wounded in the Korean War.

His father, a telegrapher for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, said he was notified Friday night that "Jerry," a paratrooper, had been "slightly wounded" in the Korean fighting and evacuated to a hospital in Japan.

Lieutenant Thomas was one of 39 men listed as wounded by the Defense Department yesterday. The list also recorded 16 new injuries in the Korean war. This raised to 76 the total wounded so far, with 35 injured. Previous releases have identified 21 killed and 23 missing.

Thomas, sr., said the Defense Department telegram gave no indication of how or where his son was wounded, or even the date of the injury.

He attended Powell Junior High and Central High schools here in 1941-42, then went to Fishburne Military Academy in Waynesboro, Va., where he graduated in 1943.

He attended Virginia Military Institute for a year, then enlisted in the Air Cadets and served in this country from 1944-45. Leaving the service after the war ended, Thomas attended George Washington University for a year in 1948, enlisted in the Army in February, 1949 and was later commissioned. He was a GW cheer leader in 1948.

His father said he went overseas in September of 1949 and served in Japan until the Korean war began.

Young Thomas' mother died in 1945. He is unmarried.

Captured GI Hits Truman, Reds Claim

Moscow, July 15 (U.P.).—The official newspaper Pravda quoted an American airman captured in Korea today as saying President Truman "muddled something" in Korea.

Pravda's woman correspondent in Seoul, Irian Vokova, telephoned an interview with two American fliers downed in the Pyongyang area.

Their names were listed as Donald S. Searman of Philadelphia and 19-year-old Aitin Peterson, a farmer's son from Michigan. Pravda also mentioned a Capt. Ambrose Hewsett who marched in a prisoners' parade July 11.

(A Moscow broadcast heard in London listed the names as Donald Sirman, a captain Newzetta and a 19-year-ol dairman named Petersen.)

(In Philadelphia, Mrs. Nancy Strickler said she is "sure" Sirman is her son, First Lieut. Donald S. Sirman.

("I'm sure he's my boy, but if they get anything out of him it must have been because they forced him," Mrs. Strickler said.)

Pravda quoted Searman as saying, "I think the Koreans could have disposed of their own business. Truman muddled something."

Pravda quoted him as explaining how he was captured:

"They fight like lions, these Koreans. I attacked a tank in the Pyongyang area July 7. I was hit immediately and forced to abandon the plane and jump with a parachute. I did not expect this. I was told the Koreans couldn't handle the Americans."

The article quoted Searman as saying he entered the Air Force because "I get paid and would like to build a cottage in Philadelphia."

The Pravda correspondent said Peterson marched from Seoul alongside Hewsitt, who surrendered with all his subordinates.

The correspondent asked, "How was it that arrogant Yankees aspiring to world domination fell prisoner to the people of a small land? How was it possible that companies, even whole battalions of Americans retreat before the soldiers of North Koera?"

The correspondent said Peterson replied:

"I didn't want to fight. I was told we were going on maneuvers and then was ordered to shoot the Koreans."

Tank Gun Set for Action on Front . . .

China-Soviet Conquest Pact Is Reported

New York, July 15 (AP).—The American China Policy Association, Inc., reported today it has received a copy of a purported secret agreement between Russia and Red China which would turn the Chinese army into an international Communist army to conquer Southeast Asia and help in the "liberation" of all Asia.

The association said it was unable to check the document's authenticity.

The association, founded in 1946 to support continuation of an open door policy in China, released what it described as a translation of the agreement, smuggled out of China. It said the treaty was dated February 12, 1950, in Moscow. The Soviet-Chinese 30-year treaty as it was made public from Moscow was dated February 14.

The document as presented by the association bound the Chinese to increase its army by four million soldiers, to reduce its population by 100 million because of "existing lack of resources," to help establish a "people's government" in Tibet, and to accord broad privileges in China to the Soviet Union.

The United States State Department said it had no comment.

The association, in releasing the document, said:

"Attempts during the past two months to check its authenticity have proven fruitless. Because of the Korean crisis we are releasing it to the press with the feeling that the course of events will shortly confirm or discredit its authenticity . . ."

The version of the treaty as released by the American group calls for stationing of Soviet troops in China, assignment of northeast and North China Sea and air bases to the Russians; mobilization of 10 million Chinese workmen to assist Russia in construction of Chinese-Russian military establishments; and availability of all North China ports including Dairen to Soviet troops. Technical personnel from Russia would advise all departments of the Chinese government.

Alfred Kohlberg, chairman of the American China Policy Association, is the admitted source for some of Senator Joseph McCarthy's (R., Wisc.) charges in Congress that the State Department has been infiltrated by Communists.

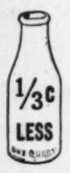
WHAT PRICE MILK ???

Let us have the truth!

In the controversy as to the merits of steam sterilization of milk utensils on the dairy farms shipping milk to the Washington area, compared to the effectiveness of chlorine sterilization which is just a mite less costly to the farmer, do not let anyone deceive you into believing that lowering the dairy farm restrictions from steam sterilization to any other method will lower the price to you of one quart of milk on your doorstep or 100 quarts, either.

Chlorine sterilization costs the average dairy farmer $3.64 less per month than live steam sterilization. How can you divide the hundreds of quarts of milk produced on the average dairy farm per month into 364 pennies—rather, how much would the production cost per quart of milk go down if sterilization restriction on dairy farms serving Washington distributors was lowered to permit the use of chlorine sterilization instead of foolproof steam?

Further pursuing the truth about the price of milk, let us have all the facts our U. S. Government can give us—the most recent facts computed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1949. They show the Washington area pays 1/3 cent less per quart for home delivered milk than the average of 56 cities.



per quart*

*U. S. Gov't Data

In the interest of truth you have the right to know the difference between Jacksonville's 25.2 cents (doorstep) per quart and 16.6 cents per quart (also doorstep) in Minneapolis.

In the interest of truth the same factors which affect the retail price of all food vary in different localities. They fluctuate from year to year and from season to season and often from day to day. We are talking about labor; transportation, including long hauls and short hauls; weather, and the myriad other factors which enter into food costs. Local conditions always control the cost of production and distribution. For instance, in 1949 Richmond doorstep milk cost 21.8 cents, Washington's 20.8 cents and Baltimore's 20.7. They are not arbitrary figures. They are based on costs to produce and distribute.

Considering that Washington milk under the D. C. Health Department regulations, which for 25 years have guaranteed local consumers the highest quality milk in the world—clean, pure, sweet milk through steam sterilization on the dairy farm—at a smaller home delivered price than 28 U. S. cities, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistic—WHY relax local laws in order to scrap steam sterilization—the way mother sterilizes the baby bottles?

In the interest of truth, while reviewing the following U. S. Government table, remember there is no higher quality of milk in the world than Washington's:

Limb Thanks Americans For Korea Aid

By The Associated Press

Korean Foreign Minister Ben C. Limb told Secretary of State Acheson yesterday that Korea is the place to "demonstrate to the world once and for all . . . that despotic communism must be decisively defeated."

Limb, who served his government in Washington before becoming Foreign Minister, declared "the morale and stamina of our forces are very high . . . I know that our over-all victory is only a question of time."

Limb asked Acheson to express his appreciation to President Truman, the American armed forces and the American people for what this Nation is doing in Korea. His message, released by the State Department, follows in part:

"In this hour of extreme trial for the Korean nation, I want you to know how deeply grateful we are for the magnificent fight America is waging to save Korea as well as democracy, and for your own great personal service in it. Korea is very proud to be the front line ally of the United States and the United Nations and most emphatically pledges all in her power to win a lasting victory for the cherished common cause. . . .

"Korea will never forget what the government and people of America are doing for her; it will go down in Korean history for many centuries as a great turning point in her national life. I shall highgly appreciate it if you will kindly convey this sentiment to President Truman, the armed forces and the people of the United States."

day. As in the case of Moscow, contents of the note were not disclosed, and Acheson is still considering it.

However, there were indications that Nehru had appealed to Acheson for a peaceful settlement of the Korean fighting, with an offer to mediate if asked by both sides.

U. N. Called Proper Forum

Lincoln White, press officer for the State Department, said Friday in Washington that the minimum condition for a solution of the Korean crisis is for the North Koreans to stop fighting and withdraw to their own territory. White also said that the "proper forum" for trying to settle the crisis is the United Nations, adding that the matter is not one for direct negotiations between Moscow and Washington.

White said he presumed Acheson would send a reply to Nehru.

MacArthur Lifts Ban Army Put On 2 American War Reporters

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

BACK TO WAR—Col. M. P. Echols (left), Gen. MacArthur's public information officer, said in Tokyo yesterday that Tom Lambert (center) of the Associated Press and Peter Kalischer (right) of the United Press had not been permitted to return to the front in Korea because some of their dispatches had been objectionable because "they gave aid and comfort to the enemy." General MacArthur, however, lifted the ban early today

quested that you inform Associated Press that after previous warning and second chance, Lambert has failed to accept the challenge. It is requested further that you notify the United Press."

Colonel Echols conceded that the objection was not based on a question of accuracy or security in Lambert's news reports.

The officer cited as an "aid and comfort to the enemy" objection an excerpt from one of Lambert's dispatches which quoted a frontline soldier saying "this is a damned useless war."

The two correspondents were accompanied to MacArthur's office by Russell Brines, chief of the Associated Press Bureau in Tokyo, and Ernest Hoberecht, United Press Chief of Bureau.

MacArthur greeted all four affably and seemed in excellent humor. He said he did not have time to discuss the causes, which he indicated had been initiated by some of his subordinates.

MacArthur intimated, however, that the basic objection was to parts of dispatches reflecting disillusionment among some frontline troops.

The general said the psychological factor was an important part of a military campaign. This factor, he said, increased responsibilities of newsmen to exercise their judgement and professional training in selecting news to be reported.

MacArthur said he was not advocating false reporting nor suppression of pertinent facts. But he said a correspondent could get a shocked frontline soldier to say anything he wanted him to say. He expressed belief circumstances warranted a leavening balance.

He repeated that formal censorship was abhorrent to him and said the Army was not adequately trained to apply it.

Balky Dockers Recant, Load Ship for Korea

Sydney, Australia, July 15 (U.P.)—Dock workers who had refused to load supplies for Australian fliers fighting alongside Americans in Korea, changed their minds today and went ahead with the work.

The dockers placed six Mustang engines and other supplies aboard the British freighter Changte after the powerful Labor Party announced is would "wage a relentless campaign against the sinister fifth column in our midst."

The dockers are members of the Communist-dominated Waterside Workers Federation, which yesterday joined the seamen's union in its boycott of arms shipments to Korea.

The Waterside Workers decided today, however, to load the cargo, and the Changte sailed on schedule.

They acted as seamen's unions throughout Australia called meetings for Tuesday at which they were expected to repudiate their Communist leaders.

Percy Spender, Minister of External Affairs, said in a statement on the Korean war that "Communist propaganda during the past week has worked itself into a crescendo of abuse against the Australian government and the United States."

Van Zandt Says We Face Licking in Korea

Harrisburg, Pa., July 15 (A.P.)—A member of the House Armed Forces Committee said today that in his opinion American troops may have to evacuate Korea in the next 72 hours.

The statement was made by Representative James E. Van Zandt (R., Pa.) in a speech before the Pennsylvania convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"We are in a hell of a fix," Van Zandt declared.

He told a reporter later that "possibly" on Monday the National Guard and Organized Reserves of the Armed Forces will be alerted for duty.

Van Zandt said the crossing of the Kum River in Korea has removed the last natural barrier before the Communist troops, and added:

"We are outnumbered ten to one and our equipment just isn't sufficient to match that of the Communists."

Subversives Barred From Armed Forces

New York, July 15 (NYHT).—Membership in, "or sympathetic association with" any of the 175 organizations on the United States Attorney General's subversive list is grounds for rejection for service in the armed forces, it was learned today.

The organizations listed in six general groups are characterized as totalitarian, fascist, Communist, subversive, or as having adopted a policy to deny others their rights under the constitution of the United States, and which seek to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means.

The regulation, which covers enlistees, inductees and officers in the Army, Navy and Air Force, provides that any man entering the military service be required to sign a loyalty certificate.

Maj. Ralph A. Johnson, adjutant of the Southern New York and New Jersey Military District, said any man falsifying the certificate leaves himself open to prosecution for fraudulent enlistment. This may mean a court-martial or civil trial with a maximum penalty of dishonorable discharge and one year at hard labor.

The regulation under which the loyalty certificates are used is dated January 19, 1950, and is listed as special regulation 600-220-1. Prospects for military service are given two forms to read which they are required to sign. They are the loyalty certificate and a list of the organizations.

The regulations include, "but are not limited to," affiliation with any group which advocates a denial of constitutional rights of any person.

The 175 organizations including 19 schools, Ku Klux Klan, Civil Rights Congress and affiliates, International Workers Order, American Jewish Labor Council, American Youth Congress, American Youth for Democracy, Jefferson School of Social Science and Tom Paine School of Westchester, N. Y.

Saltonstall Would Favor Calling Guard

Lunenburg, Mass., July 15 (U.P.).—Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.), urged the Government today to call out the Reserves and National Guard "as fast as the military can absorb them" if it cannot get enough volunteers.

In a speech prepared for the Massachusetts State and Worcester County Republican Clubs, outing at Whalom Park, Saltonstall said Congress would enact any controls "that may be necessary to back up our boys."

Saltonstall said the only diplomacy understood by the Russians is "that of the armed fist." He said if it was big enough, "it will not have to strike so hard or perhaps not again."

Saltonstall said chances "are mighty slim" that the conflict will soon stop." A second possibility, he said, is that it may continue on a localized front in Korea.

"The third possibility is that this conflict in Korea can spread and gradually develop into World War III. We pray this will not happen, but we know there are sensitive spots throughout the world today," he said.

He said the Nation should be prepared for any possibility.

Navy, Marines Ask Women Veterans to Enlist

The United States Navy and the Marine Corps yesterday appealed to their women veterans to volunteer for active duty.

First call came from the Marines, which said the initial qdota will include former enlisted women and a small number of lieutenants and captains in the Marine Reserves.

The Navy asked its enlisted women veterans to volunteer, for 12 months duty, while the Marines asked veterans to return for "extended active duty." Initial group of Marine women veterans returning to duty in this area will go to Camp Lejeune, N. C. for training.

At the same time yesterday, the Navy's recruiting and naval officer procurement office at 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw. here announced it will be open seven days a week effective at once.

Earlier this week, the Army had ordered all its major recruiting stations in this area to remain open on a similar basis.

The Navy said yesterday it was "swamped" with applications from officer candidates here and would accept only such specialists as doctors, nurses, legal and electronics technicians for the time being.

The local Navy recruiting office had 12 applicants for enlisted duty yesterday, and the Marine Corps recruiters had 15, with 4 qualifying.

Seven men enlisted in the Army yesterday, and three in the Air Force.

Army enlistees will go to Fort Knox, Ky., or to Fort Dix, N. J. if they have had previous training. They are: Oliver C. Robinson, 22, of 1309 Wallach pl. nw.; Lee R. Brittle, 21, of 4323 F st. nw.; Robert A. Groves, 21, of 1112 E st. se.; George O. Lindsay, 22, of 639 Longfellow st. nw.; Herbert L. McKiver, 18, 1534 15th st. nw.; Harvey M. Dickerson, 18, of 821 57th pl. ne., and John P. Sheler, 26, of 1435 Harvard st. nw.

Air Force men with no previous training go to Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex., or, if trained, to Bolling Air Base here. They are: William J. Clayton 3d, 18, of 6104 Foote st. nw.; William C. Thompson, 18, of Herndon, Va., and Robert H. Parker, 19, of 223 14th st. ne.

In other enlistment fields, the Army Enlisted Reserve Corps announced it had set up a new ERC recruiting station at 2131 C st. nw.

Navy Reserve Air Training Program Set

The Naval Air Reserve Training Unit at Anacostia yesterday released the schedule of annual two-week training cruises for its 12 squadrons.

On Monday, one attack squadron, two fighter squadrons and one fleet-service squadron, will take off for Pensacola, Fla., where they will rendezvous with the aircraft carrier U. S. S. Wright for seaborne operations.

The squadrons, VA-669, VF-663, VF-664 and FASRon-661 will return here July 30.

On August 6, VC-661, a search squadron, and VF-665, a fighter outfit, will fly to Quonset Point, R. I., for two weeks of training there.

Two other fighter outfits, VF-661 and VF-662, will spend their training periods, beginning August 26, at Quonset Point also.

FASRON 665 and VP-661, a patrol squadron, will train July 24 to August 6 at Jacksonville, Fla.

The transport squadron, VR-661, will take its training cruise next April at Patuxent, Md. Attack squadron 661 is winding up its cruise at Anacostia today.

Contempt Laid To 6 in Probe ordinator of the New York Labor Peace Conference."

Branca, former Eliot Junior High School teacher of 833 Allison st. nw., not only refused to answer the committee's questions but declared he would not let it use him as a "stool pigeon."

Mrs. Rodman refused to answer any questions on relationship with the Communist Party or "front" organizations. Her address was given by the committee as 3700 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Miss Sasuly declined to answer questions about her affiliations but worded her reply each time: "I am unable to answer."

The new recommendations will bring to 50 the number of contempt citations voted by the House group in recent months as a result of its inquiries into communism in this country.

Wood said the committee will decide Tuesday whether to take similar action against two or three other witnesses as a result of its current hearings into Communist activity in Ohio.

Several committee members have suggested bringing contempt action against three witnesses who refused on Friday to say whether they are or have ever been members of the Communist Party. The witnesses are David H. Levison and Frank Hashmall of Cincinnati, and Talmadge Raley of Lockland, Ohio.

Like others among the 50 already named by the committee, these three refused to answer on the ground they might incriminate themselves. Thirty-nine of the 50 witnesses testified in connection with the House group's recent inquiry into Communist activity in Hawaii.

Of Hiskey, the committee said in a recent report he refused to answer questions involving his alleged association with a man described as the head of a Soviet espionage ring operating among atomic research personnel at the University of Chicago.

"As a result of his association with the known Soviet espionage agent, Arthur Adams," the committee said, "he was removed from employment by the Manhattan Engineering District." That was the name given during the war to the A-bomb project.

The report said Hiskey later urged a Cleveland atomic research engineer to furnish information to Adams.

The decision to recommend contempt action against Miss Tice was reached by the committee in record time. It was based on her appearance at a hearing yesterday morning.

The group also heard from another witness who, like Miss Tice, formerly was employed by the United Electrical Workers Union (UE). This union recently was thrown out of the CIO on the ground that it hewed too close to the Communist Party line.

Marjorie Steinbacher, a former secretary for the UE in Cincinnati, described Miss Tice as "the brain" behind the preparation of Communist Party literature in Cincinnati.

Miss Steinbacher said she and her former husband were Communists at one time, but quit the party when they learned it was not "just a political party."

"The straw that broke the camel's back," she testified, was a piece of party literature advocating free love.

"That was just too much for me," she said.

Great Peace Effort Urged By Churchill

Few Curbs by West

Reds Enjoy Free Rein In Germany

By Joseph Newman

Berlin, July 15 (NYHT).—With Communist tactics in Korea constantly before us, it becomes painfully evident here that Western authorities are slumbering in Germany while Soviet agents continue to plot subversion with comparative freedom.

The immediate Soviet aims may be reduced to two: To establish strong fifth columns which will soften up West Berlin and West Germany politically and economically and eventually undermine them militarily; and, two, to exploit them meanwhile by withdrawing strategic materials for Soviet rearmament.

The first aim is facilitated by an incredible arrangement which proves Western ineptness in dealing with Communist infiltration during the critically important period preceding a possible outbreak of warfare. East Germans are free to come and go in West Germany both legally and illegally, but West Germans are unable to enter East Germany except by special, Soviet-controlled permits.

Open Field for Reds

As a result, West Germany is an open field where Soviet agents are free to romp at will while East Germany is closed to all except those invited there to advance the interests of the Soviet Union.

This failure to act against Germans operating in the interests of the Soviet Union also helps Russia achieve its second aim. Its success in withdrawing strategic materials from West Germany and West Berlin has been so great that Tagesspiegel, a sober, West Berlin newspaper, now refers to the Soviet Union as the "silent partner in the Marshall Plan."

Through ostensibly respectable business firms planted in West Berlin and West Germany, Tagesspiegel reports, Russia is securing copper, lead, tin, special steels, ball bearings, engines, telephone cables and medicines—all strategic materials needed by Russia.

High Import Figure

It cites the example of a Hamburg firm which turned over a considerable amount of American telephone cables to a West Berlin dealer who bought them for the Soviet army at reduced, American war-surplus prices.

The West German newspaper Welt suggested that the import figures of East Germany may be the highest in Europe. It estimates 35 percent of its imports are transshipped to Russia and the rest remains in East Germany to be manufactured into goods which are shipped to Russia as reparations.

Plymouth, England, July 15 (U.P.).—Winston Churchill called tonight for a "supreme effort" to bridge the gulf between East and West before Russia catches up with the United States in production of the atomic bomb.

The wartime Prime Minister said the atomic bomb in American hands in the "only physical shield and protection of the free world" and that Russia, with the largest armies in the world, is busy trying to make atomic bombs as fast as she can.

Churchill said the Korean conflict has brought nearer the dangers of a third world war but "I do not give up hope expressed to you three months ago of a supreme effort to bridge the gulf between the two worlds, if not in friendship, at least without the hatred and maneuvers of the cold war."

Renewal of Hitler Fight

Churchill, speaking before a Conservative Party rally here, called the battle against the invading North Koreans essentially a renewal of the fight against Adolf Hitler for human freedom and lauded the "courage and resolution" of the "handful" of American soldiers in Korea.

He said President Truman has the overwhelming support of the British Empire and Commonwealth in the Korean action.

"I have not the knowledge to enable me to predict how this Korean fighting will end," Churchill said, "but let me here express our admiration for the daring and skill with which the handful of American soldiers, three or four battalions at most, who have as yet been brought into action in Korea, have fought their delaying action against overwhelming odds."

Korea Brings Danger Nearer

Of the fighting in Korea, he said:

"I do not say that what has happened and is happening in Korea has made the dangers of a third world war greater. They were already grave. It has brought them nearer. They are more apparent and I trust indeed that it has made the great masses of the free peoples throughout the free world more aware, awake and alive to where they stand.

"The United States are bearing with courage and resolution in a noble way the burden of this clash which is in all essentials a renewal of our fight for human freedom against Hitler."

Dog Wins Automobile

Niagara Falls, Ontario, July 15 (U.P.).—A dog won a new automobile at a carnival here last night. The winning ticket was in the name of "Skippy" Secord, a 9-year-old dog owned by H. S. Secord of Niagara Falls.

Prison for 28

3 Czechs Get Spy Verdict Of Death

Prague, July 15 (U.P.). — Three Czechs were sentenced to death, two to life imprisonment and 26 to terms from 1 to 30 years today on charges of high treason and espionage.

Two other defendants were acquitted by the court sitting in Vsetin, Moravia.

All defendants were charged with plotting the overthrow of the Communist regime, conspiring with the United States counter-intelligence corps, collecting arms, spreading antistate leaflets and "terrorizing the district."

They were charged with belonging to an underground known as "Svetlana," which was alleged to have branches throughout the country. Some 200 Czechs have been convicted and a number sentenced to death on charges during the last three months of belonging to the group.

The trial began July 10 and concluded this morning.

Another treason and espionage trial in which a former National Socalist member of Parliament was sentenced to life imprisonment and four other men to 15 to 25 years was reported today in the newspaper Lidova Demokracie. The sentences were handed down by the state court in Pilsen July 13, the newspaper said.

Stalin's Son Leads Big Red Air Show Today

Moscow, July 15 (U.P.).—Lieut. Gen. Vassili Stalin, deputy commander of Sunday's air force show at Tushino Airport, declared today that his father had charged Soviet airmen with flying "higher, faster and farther" than anyone else.

"This task is being fulfilled successfully," the son of the Soviet Premier said, "and the Soviet people are taking all measures to make the air force even stronger and mightier."

Vassili Stalin was interviewed by Pravda, the Communist Party organ, and Izvestia, the government paper, in connection with the air show to commemorate the thirty-second anniversary of the founding of the Soviet air force.

(Radio Moscow, mointored in London, said Russia's latest jet fighters and bombers will be on display.)

Young Stalin said the program will open with the national anthem and 20 artillery salvos. Then a squadron of planes will tow a gigantic portrait of "the founder of Soviet aviation, the best friend of the aviators, the father and teacher of the Soviet people, the great Stalin."

Sports planes and Yak-18's will trace the words, "Glory to Stalin."

(One of Russia's newest, the Yak-18 is a two-seat trainer and a modified design of the UT-2, a sports plane which first appeared in 1936.)

Yaks will perform individual and mass acrobatics, hundreds of parachutists—in chutes of many colors—will descend simultaneously, and squadrons of multi-motored heavy ships, rocket bombers and fighters will conclude the show.

Capital Shift Plan Opposed By Truman

Congressional sources reported yesterday that President Truman has put his foot down on proposals to set up an alternate Capital for wartime emergencies.

These sources said the proposals may be revived later as part of the Nation's civil defense program. But for the time being, they said, they are out.

The suggestions were put forward publicly last February when the joint congressional Atomic Energy Committee was holding hearings on civil defense plans. They were embodied in a bill introduced by Representative Chet Holifield (D., Calif.), a committee member.

The bill would establish a commission to investigate the problems of setting up an alternate Capital ready to function if Washington, D. C., were knocked out by an atomic attack. It also would make recommendations on selecting successors to high officials killed in such an assault.

At the time, Holifield said such studies should be made "while there is time to make security plans with calmness and without any semblance of hysteria."

Congressional sources said the President, however, felt the measure would create undue hysteria and give Communists a propaganda point. He was said to believe that these considerations outweighed advantages of the proposal.

Furthermore, the President was said to believe that action on the suggestion should await a civil defense report by the National Security Resources Board, promised for the first of September.

Man Who Got Lime in His Eye Home Casualty

A brother and sister, aged 4 and 5, who ate rat poison, a youngster who swallowed a dime and a nickel, and a man who got lime in his eyes were among the 122 District residents treated for home accidents this week.

The District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service gave this breakdown of the injuries: 45 falls, 9 burns, 7 poisonings, 17 cuts, 8 cases of swallowed objects, and 36 cases too varied to classify.

Red Cross listed 3458 home accidents to date this year, compared to 3449 for the same period in 1949. Of the 1950 total, 103 accidents resulted in death against 131 for 1949.

Executed as Red Spy

Taipei, Formosa, July 15 (AP).—Wang Hsieth-tao, one-time colonel in the Chinese Nationalist army, was executed today as a Communist spy. No details of his operations were disclosed.

Local Cameramen Headed for War Zone . . .

CHECK EQUIPMENT — The Jones boys, Charles (left) of the Times-Herald and Gene, of The Washington Post, topnotch news cameramen, have given up their Speed Graphics and are headed for Korea. They leave today for Tokyo and then Korea's war front to make newsreels for NBC television programs. They are veterans of World War II

Two of this town's favorite news photographers — the cocky, unpredictable "Jones Boys" — will take off today by plane for the Korean battle scene.

They will fly to Tokyo, and expect to be in Korea by Friday.

Gene Jones and Charley Jones, 25-year-old twins, will be right up there where the fighting is the thickest if you can measure them on past performances.

Gene leaves The Washington Post, Charley the Washington Times-Herald to cover the war as a newsreel team for the National Broadcasting Co. television network.

A war won't be anything new to the Jones brothers. It was just about six years ago that they packed up their gear, took a pull at their new Marine uniforms and headed for the Pacific where they served as combat photographers for 21 months.

Gene was with the Fourth Marine Division and Charley did his island hopping with the Fifth Marine Division. They finally caught up with one another during the assault on Iwo Jima.

After their return from the war, the Jones brothers were named official photographers of the District Fire Department.

Their car was equipped with police and fire radio call receivers, an auto telephone and firemen's gear. After their regular working hours they cruised the city waiting for something to happen.

If a fire, suicide, murder, plane crash or auto accident was reported at 5 a. m., one of the Jones boys was sure to be the first news photographer at the scene.

The Post's Gene Jones won three first prizes and two lesser awards in the White House News Photographers Association judging last February, an unprecedented feat.

The photographer twins live with their mother at 5420 Connecticut ave. nw.

More Pumps Rushed To Grounded Franconia

Quebec City, Quebec, July 15 (U.P.)—More pumps were rushed to the grounded liner Franconia today as water poured into her punctured hull in increasing quantities and the 20,175-ton liner began to lean more steeply to starboard.

Five pumps have been working steadily since the vessel rammed into jagged rocks off the Isle of Orleans Wednesday.

U. S. Speeds Up Its Rearmament Program For Western Europe; Aid May Be Doubled

By the United Press

The United States and its Western European partners will expand and speed up their combined rearmament program, American officials disclosed last night.

The officials said an urgent plan being worked out by the White House and the Defense and State Departments calls for a "substantial" increase of American arms shipments to Western Europe above the one-billion-dollar program now clearing Congress.

The new program may double the figure now under consideration. It also proposes an increase in defense production by the other 11 European members of the North Atlantic Defense Pact.

Authorities said arms aid also will be increased and speeded to Asiatic countries under the plan being discussed by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Mr. Truman's adviser, W. Averell Harriman.

Officials indicated Red successes in Asia have prompted a new review of how much military might the Communists could throw at Finland, eastern Germany, Yugoslavia, Turkey, Iran and other possible targets of Soviet aggression.

The urgency of European rearmament was underscored by officials who said defense shipments across the Atlantic have been kept on schedule so far despite the need for arms in Korea.

Thirty ships were said to be loading arms at United States ports or to be on the high seas this week with arms for Europe. Reconditioned tanks were said to be en route to Atlantic ports for the first time, their destination Europe.

The new plan will be presented to the North Atlantic treaty powers on the basis that more arms will be sent to western European nations if they will jack up their own arms production and military training schedules.

The Atlantic Pact's military production and supply board met this week in secret session at Copenhagen to discuss defense problems. Deputies to the foreign ministers of the 12 treaty powers will meet in London July 25 to get new planning under way.

Disclosure of the new arms aid program appeared to indicate that the United States is trying to reassure friendly nations alarmed by our reverses in Korea. American prestige, it was admitted, has suffered but this can be offset, officials believe, by assuring that our military power is growing.

GOP Women to Meet

The Prince Georges County Federation of Republican Women will entertain members of the State Federation at a luncheon meeting July 24 at the Prince Georges Country Club. The meeting will be at 11 a. m., lunch at 1 p. m. Reservations may be made with Mrs. John Willard at Union 2739.

Group to Hold Testimonial for Jerome McKee

A testimonial dinner for Jerome B. McKee, president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations, will be held at 6:30 p. m. Wednesday in the dining room of the Dupont Plaza Hotel.

McKee

The dinner is sponsored by the American Business Association, and will precede the regular monthly meeting of the Federation at 8:15 p. m.

In announcing the testimonial, J. A. Kamerow, president of the American Business Association, said McKee "has given and is giving unstintingly of his time and his talents to make Washington a better city to live in."

Senate Approaches Showdown On Slashing of Funds for ECA

New attempts to slash further into Marshall Plan spending neared a Senate showdown yesterday with both sides using national defense reasons to support their argument.

Urging another cut in the funds now ticketed at $2,668,000,000 in the Senate's general appropriation bill, Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) said the program would give Europe many commodities now needed for the Korean war.

Majority Leader Lucas (D., Ill.), rallying Administration forces to ward off another cut in funds for the Economic Cooperation Administration which runs the program, said such an action would give "further aid and comfort to the Kremlin."

"We need to do everything we can to continue to bolster the courage and morale of those in the European democracies who are on our side in this battle against communism," Lucas said.

Thirty-five Senators of both parties are seeking to make a 10 percent cut in nondefense spending represented in the 35-billion-dollar appropriation bill to run the Government for the fiscal year ending next June 30. ECA funds are included in the bill.

But Senator Robertson (D., Va.) said he and some other advocates of this 10 percent plan would be willing to see it applied to ECA only if the Senate first restored part of the funds, previously cut from the ECA appropriation.

Robertson said ECA officials had informed him the proposed new 10 percent slash "would wreck the European recovery program," and added, "such an action would be a direct blow at our own security at a moment when we must rely upon the support and firm stand of other free nations."

Robertson said the current program, representing the third year of the four-year Marshall Plan, already has been cut nearly half a billion dollars.

"As the bill now stands ECA is cut 32 percent below last year and more than 50 percent under the funds of two years ago," he added.

Senators Bridges (R., N. H.) and Byrd (D., Va.), sponsors of the 10 percent cut in nondefense spending in general, estimated it would save between six and seven hundred million dollars.

Ferguson, favoring another ECA reduction, said this country now faces possible shortages of steel, iron, oil, machinery and many other commodities needed for the Korean campaign that would be diverted to Europe by the ECA program.

Wallace Sides With U. S. and U. N. on Korea, Splitting With Progressive Party Leadership

South Salem, N. Y., July 15 (AP).—Henry A. Wallace today declared his support of the United States and the United Nations in the Korean conflict.

By so doing, he split with leaders of the Progressive Party, under whose banner he ran for President in 1948.

"I hold no brief for the past actions of either the United States or Russia," Wallace said, "but when my country is at war, and the United Nations sanctions that war, I am on the side of my country and the U. N."

In New York, the national committee of the Progressive Party countered with a statement saying "foreign arms and foreign intervention" can only make the Korean conflict "more difficult and more bloody."

Wallace and the party leaders agreed in calling for strong United Nations measures to end the struggle in Korea and for the admission of Communist China to the United Nations.

Wallace declined to go along with the party's condemnation of President Truman's order that the United States fleet defend Formosa. He avoided any mention of Formosa in his statement.

The Progressive Party statement asked for an official American declaration that the atomic bomb will not be used in Korea.

Wallace said he didn't think any responsible American official considered using the A-bomb.

Wallace called for strong U. N. efforts to solve the Korean situation in a way that would help the Korean people, save face for both the U. S. and Russia, and make for a stronger U. N.

"The first step," he said, "is for Truman and Stalin to meet to discuss a real Point Four program, operating through the U. N. with money contributed by all the nations on the basis of one-third of their armaments expenditures. . . .

"Let Korea be the first place to operate with a new U. N. rehabilitation program."

The former Vice President also proposed free elections as soon as the fighting ends "for the purpose of unifying Korea under a democratic regime."

"It is insanity for the United States to fight for Syngman Rhee and his cruel government which was repudiated by the South Koreans themselves on May 30," Wallace said.

Middle-Course Control Policy Indicated, With Steel Allocation, Time Payment Curbs

booming market for those steel-consuming durable goods—autos, television sets, etc.

4. "De-booming" the housing boom. Again the purpose is to reduce demand for raw materials and lessen inflationary pressure. The Government probably needs no new grant of powers to accomplish this. It created the housing boom by liberal credit policies and can doubtless dampen it drastically by reversing those policies.

5. Inventory controls. The method would be to establish standards on what fair and reasonable inventories are. The purpose would be to prevent spiraling "fear buying" with its consequent inflationary effect and consumption of scarce materials.

6. Very substantially increased taxes. Here again the aim is to reduce demand and inflationary pressure, not to mention the goal of simply paying the costs of the increased military effort.

The program now under consideration, it is learned, definitely does not entail civilian rationing, price controls, wage freezes or manpower direction. No requests for these powers will be made.

Still uncertain, at the moment, are questions on whether the Government will ask for power to issue priorities to various classes of users of materials, a large proportion of which has been allocated to military purposes; whether there will be a general tightening of Federal Reserve credit policy (it would help reduce inflationary pressure, but would raise the cost of servicing the national debt); and what agency or agencies will administer the control program.

The program outlined above is, of course, based on the assumption that there will not be a general conflict, a World War III. On the other hand, it obviously contemplates a program much larger than that needed to bring the Korean conflict alone to a successful conclusion.

Finally it is based on the premise that it is necessary not merely to increase the United States' defense preparations, but also to enlarge above present plans the armament of other non-Communist countries, particularly those in the North Atlantic Pact.

As is obvious, the measure of defense spending—and therefore the need for economic controls—is much enlarged from estimates of two weeks or even one week ago.

At first it was thought that the additional money needed would be well below five billion dollars. And it was believed that the American economy was sufficiently strong and expansive to handle that kind of spending without additional regulatory authority.

Then, when it was seen that the ante had to be much enlarged, several lines of opinion about controls developed.

On the one extreme, the question was raised as to whether or not this was the time to ask for a full-scale, all-out economic mobilization plan, complete with price control, rigid allocations, rationing and manpower control.

A plan for this—necessary, certainly, in the event of total war—has been in the making for many months at the National Security Resources Board. Its chairman, W. Stuart Symington, raised the question of puttting it into effect, but did not, as has been erroneously reported, push insistently for it.

On the other extreme, a group of officials centering around Commerce Secretary Charles Sawyer argued that the less controls the better—particularly for political considerations. They plumped for voluntary allocations, a system in effect during 1948, under a law authorized by Senator Taft (R., Ohio).

It provided that the Government would advise a particular industry how much of its production should be allocated to specific categories of users. Then the industry would agree among themselves, freed from danger of anti-trust law action, how to do the parcelling out.

Nonpriority customers, meantime, would be expected to agree to curtail their purchasing.

A middle group, apparently including the State Department, the Council of Economic Advisers and officials of some other agencies, is now opposing this idea.

Going back to the experience of the first couple of years of World War II, they point to a situation where autos, juke-boxes, refrigerators and electric fans rolled out in great quantity despite the priorities that were supposed to have gone to military goods.

They contend that the experience of the later war period showed that industry had to be told, explicity, where to allocate the raw materials, and that meantime, to prevent gray and black markets, a fixed limitation had to be put on the production of competitive, but nonessential, users of steel and other metals.

On the other hand, this group points to great dissimilarities between the situation now and that in the early 1940's. From these, they argue that there is no need for rationing, particularly of food, which is plentiful.

Furthermore, they believe that a combination of tighter credit policies, curbs on installment buying, and limitation orders can diminish civilian consumption by about the same extent as military spending is increased.

If this could be done, there would be no net increase in total spending, and hence no net increase in inflationary pressure.

Their argument includes these premises:

If Congress will pass substantial increases in taxation, purchasing power by civilians will be consequently decreased, with a deflationary effect.

Next, with a restoration of authority to invoke "Regulation W," the Federal Reserve Board's wartime power to obstruct installment buying, inflationary pressure will be further reduced—and in the right place.

This is because the present boom centers in large part on autos and television sets. A great proportion of these are bought on time. Regulation would require a large down payment and a short period in which to pay off. Consequently, it would curb the present heavy buying, and thus reduce the output of industries using steel, and other tight metals.

Third, the other phase of the current boom, and a huge inflationary force in itself, is the high level of construction, particularly home building and modernizing. But this high level is made possible by liberal Federal guarantees of mortgages and housing loans.

The Government can easily reverse this policy. It can decide to drag its feet on granting loans. More simply, it can merely appraise new construction at very low levels for the purpose of issuing mortgages. Then, with a much smaller loan of Government money, builders and buyers will not be able to afford new construction.

All of these steps, it is argued, have not only a deflationary effect, but they free the pressure on steel and other scarce items—and on trained workers, too—so that they can be diverted to military production.

Fourth, limitation orders on autos and other durable goods will also lessen competition for materials in short supply. Makers of television sets will not bid up prices for steel or copper, for example, in the grey markets, because the limitation order forbids them from using the materials they buy.

How badly would all this hurt the individual consumer? Not much, according to most Washington economists.

The reason for their optimism is the fact that America has just passed through three or four years of relative plenty and of very high purchasing. People are generally well stocked up; they have been prosperous and have bought accordingly. For the most part, they have laid in their necessary durable goods—autos, refrigerators, washing machines and whatnot.

This is in great contrast to the situation in 1941. Then, after almost 10 years of not being able to afford those things, eight million people were given jobs, and millions more started to earn high wages. The competition to buy what there was available was fierce.

The result was inflation; price controls had to be applied. Now, with the better situation among consumers for the past few years, and the expectation of Congressional authority to apply deflationary monetary and allocation measures, the hope is that no price controls will be needed.

Some economists in Washington feel that the American position at the outset of a much expanded program of military spending is infinitely better than in 1941. They decry the argument that then there was "fat" to permit expansion—in the form of eight million unemployed, and factories working at only two thirds of capacity—while now, with what looks like capacity production and almost full employment, stringencies and pressures will develop at once.

These hopeful economists contend that the situation is probably the other way around.

In the first place, as noted above, consumers of the goods that compete in materials and skills with defense weapons are pretty well stocked up.

Second, the eight million unemployed in 1941 were a drawback. Those workers are now on the jobs more or less where they ought to be for military production. They are in the factories that can be converted to defense work.

Furthermore, they are already trained and have the habit of hard work. No great retraining, or adjustment to work habits, are required.

Next, they are now working a fraction over 40 hours a week. They can work 44, or 48, if that is required. In this fact, and in the circumstance that there are, after all, still three million unemployed, there is very considerable slack that can be taken up to meet urgent needs.

Finally, and perhaps most important, is the fact that American industry, only five years away from war work, is trained and equipped to convert back to weaponeering. The industries that made the material for World War II, and which are now making cars, radios, television equipment and household goods await nothing more than the actual orders from the defense establishments.

According to industrial reports, the change-over now would be a trifling problem, compared with the painful, two to three-year-long process at the beginning of the last decade.

In all this, there is one imponderable—aside, of course, from the development of a general world war—that may throw hopeful estimates and present plans askew.

That is the threat of widespread "scare buying" by consumers and industrial processers. If this trend should spiral, an immediate pressure could arise that would bring inflation into being before any measures could be put into effect to stop it.

In that event, just as in 1942, a wage and price freeze might be inevitable.

No Shortage of Sugar Due, Experts Warn

indicated at 12,526,000 tons, the largest crop on record." That would mean a yield of sugar of about 1,900,000 tons, as compared with 1,560,000 tons last year.

2. "Prospective production of cane for sugar is indicated at 7,597,000 tons. This compares with 6,796,000 tons in 1949 and the 10-year average of 5,915,000." Such a crop would produce about 575,000 tons of sugar compared with 500,000 tons last year.

Sugar distribution in the United States is strictly controlled. The Sugar Act of 1948 directs the Secretary of Agriculture each year to establish the "annual consumption estimate" for the coming year. Imports from sugar-producing areas offshore are based upon this estimate.

Domestic growers fight to keep this estimate low, because upon it depends the amount of sugar that may come into the country. The scarcer the supply the better the price.

Brannan originally fixed the consumption estimate this year at 7,500,000 tons. Last week he raised it 350,000 tons to 7,850,000. Under the law, the original 7,500,000 tons was distributed as follows:

Domestic beet areas, about 20 States, 1,800,000 tons.

Domestic cane States (two, Louisiana and Florida) 500,000 tons.

Hawaii, one million tons.

Puerto Rico, 910,000 tons.

The Philippines, under the Philippine Trade Act, 952,000 tons, permitted to enter duty free.

Consumption Has Fallen

Of the remainder, about 98 percent is allocated to Cuba, the rest to other countries such as Peru, San Domingo, Haiti, etc. Before the war, considerable amounts of beet sugar were imported from Poland and Czechoslovakia.

Nobody knows what six years of sugar rationing during and after the war did to consumption habits in the United States. But the per capita consumption has never become as large since rationing was removed as it was before the war. In the 1920s consumption ranged generally above 100 pounds per person a year, reaching more than 103 pounds in 1922, 1925, 1926, 1927 and 1928. In 1930 it reached an all-time high of 109 pounds. In 1939 it was 100.2 pounds per person.

During the rationed, war years it dropped to 73.5 pounds in 1945 and 74.4 in 1946. It never regained prewar figures. In 1949 per capita consumption was estimated a 90.4 pounds, or 19 pounds per person below the 1930 high.

Some Blame Reducing Diets

Some observers credit this drop to consumption habits acquired during rationing—such as doing without sugar or cutting down the amount used in coffee, tea, etc. Others say the drop in consumption is due to the same cause credited for a similar drop in potato consumption—reducing diets.

Still other sources say the drop has been caused by higher prices. The average retail price was 5.2 cents in 1940 and 5.7 in 1941, gainst 9.5 cents a pound in 1949.

Still another explanation is that consumption of substitutes has greatly increased, particularly corn sugar and syrup. Recently consumption of honey—particularly in commercial use by bakers and confectioners—has increased. Under the Agriculture Act of 1949, known as the Anderson-Gore Act, price supports for honey are made mandatory, in spite of the fact that honey is a by-product of commercialized pollenization. Beekeepers with huge numbers of bee colonies, travel the country throughout the year renting their bee colonies to apple orchardists, buckwheat planters, alfalfa growers and others for a fixed fee per 1000 bees. As a result, honey production has grown enormously.

last 18 days. At least half of the buyers were carrying the tires home, and not having them mounted on the car or as a spare, dealers said.

Tire purchases in lots of four were not rare, dealers reported. Some said that the earliest and heaviest buyers were "Pentagon brass."

Dealers reported stocks as "very low and running out." Prospective buyers, many of them standing in line remembering the car that rested on blocks during World War II, agreed.

Popular sizes were listed as 600x16s, 670x15s, 710x15s and 760x15s. 'You could put my stock of those tires in your eye," the largest tire dealer in Washington reported.

Tire dealers themselves started the spree. Shortly after the United States resolution committing the U. N. to the aid of South Korea had been accepted, they started buying "everything we could get our hands on," as one dealer put it.

Thus when the public started buying three weeks ago, Washington tire dealer stocks were at an all time high. And so, despite the heaviest tire-buying on record, some dealers still had a supply only 35 percent less than normal yesterday.

One dealer, who said he normally stocked 4000 tires, reported his business had more than doubled in the last 18 days. But, he said, he still had almost 2500 tires on hand.

Area general managers for some of the large firms, all of whom asked not to be quoted by name, reported they had told local dealers they were now operating on "an allocation basis." None of the dealers knew yet what his allocation was to be.

Hadlock said the shortage had been induced locally, and not through any diminished production on the part of tire manufacturers.

Sheriff Is Partner in Slots, 'Numbers' Firm, Senators Told

and gambling are rather well intertwined in Florida, ended with a round of applause by the audience. The committee will have closed sessions in St. Louis and Kansas City next week.

The hearing brought out the fact that the five-man S. and G. Syndicate, which for years has operated all bookmaking at the Miami Beach hotels, was muscled in on last spring by a sixth member, Harry Russell, alleged to be a Capone syndicate character from Chicago.

Russell, sought by the Senators as a witness, apparently changed his mind about testifying for fear of being murdered. A letter from a Chicago attorney, revealed last night, said Russell told him "that Binaggio's case history illustrated" his point of view. Binaggio was the Kansas City Democratic political boss killed in gangland fashion last spring. One theory was that he was slain for "singing" to the grand jury in that city.

Russell, it appeared from testimony here, had been giving evidence to police officers, but it was far from clear whether this represented stool pigeon activities.

Johnston Sends Wire

Another missing witness, William H. Johnston, dog and race track boss, sent a telegram from Chicago, Ill., saying he was too busy at a harness race to appear at this time. He denied any "underworld connections."

Johnston, Louis Wolfson and C. V. Griffin were the big financial supporters in Gov. Fuller Warren's 1948 campaign. Griffin, once mad at Warren, was not in a talking mood when he testified. It was brought out that Griffin had told both committee investigator and a reporter that Johnston was a "front" in Florida for a Chicago mob, but he testified he never made any such remark.

Another Warren associate, Attorney John Rush, testified today that he once received a $10,000 fee from the S. & G. syndicate for drafting a bill to legalize gambling in Florida. The bill has yet to become law. Rush dismissed the whole senatorial investigation in Florida as nothing more than a political fight against Warren by his enemies.

Former Police Chief Heard

Another witness, Miami Beach Councilman William Burbridge, told of extensive financial dealings, with one of the S. & G. partners. Still another witness, a former chief of police on the Beach, testified that when he took office he made it clear to one and all that he "didn't want to know anything about bookmaking while I was chief."

Leo Gips, who listed a batch of gambling spots where he had worked, told the Senators standard practice was to pay the syndicate here $75 a week "ice money" for protection, $50 a week for phone services plus half of the profits.

Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley, who made public the 26 million dollar S. & G. income, figures that if the syndicate made the same 15 percent profit that the legal pari-mutuel machines make at race tracks the profit before expenses would be around four million dollars. He said the profits probably would be higher because the syndicate pays no odds higher than 20 to 1 and refuses to take big wise-money bets. His estimate was that at least 200 bookie spots here contributed to the S. and G. income.

Gaming "Leases" Brought Out

Another witness, Abe Allenberg of New York, once ran Tropical Park race track for Erickson. He testified that in 1947 he bought 10 tickets at $250 each for Erickson for the Democratic National Committee dinner here and that Erickson was among the guests. At another time Allenberg ran the Wofford Hotel here, a gang hangout.

Myer Schine, who operates the Roney Plaza Hotel among others, said he received from Erickson about $40,000" for the right to run the bookmaking concession in that hotel.

It also was brought out that some $20,000 was paid for a similar "lease" at the Boco Raton Club.

Committee to Study Testimony for Perjury

Miami, Fla., July 15 (U.P.). — Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), said today that his committee would study testimony taken here for "evidences of perjury."

Kefauver told newsmen testimony from some 25 witnesses provided "ample evidence in many instances to show that the laws have not been enforced" in Florida.

"Law enforcement is largely a local matter," the Senator said. "But the committee and the Senate feel that when organized crime operates in interstate commerce to adversely affect the economy . . . and to cause people to lose confidence in local government, it is a serious matter."

Justice Jackson Decries 'Trial by Publicity'

Stanford University, Calif., July 15 (AP).—United States Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson said today "trial by publicity" and "mob atmosphere" threaten to destroy this Nation's criminal trial process.

"The trial judge has largely lost control of the influences that can be brought to bear upon the jury," he declared.

Jackson said, radio, television, news reels combine to bring to jurors "matter which the judge rules to be inadmissible and keeps the lawyers from presenting in court."

He criticized the appearance of picket lines outside courtrooms but added "the picket line, by its very crudeness and self-evident impropriety, is likely to offend the juror." Therefore, he said, it may constitute less actual danger than "subtler and more respectable" influences.

Jackson spoke at the dedication of Stanford University's new one-million-dollar law school building.

He said courts and the legal profession cannot make good the constitutional assurance of a fair trial if "agencies that make and convey public opinion do not cooperate."

"If these agencies do not respect the judicial process sufficiently to forgo scooping it, pressuring it or circumventing it, fair trial in this country is headed in the direction we so deplore when we see examples of farcical trials abroad."

"There is often ground to suspect," he added, "that the forces that pressure the courtroom from the outside have had aid and comfort from the inside. And disorderly, obstructive, contemptuous or defiant demonstrations within the courtroom can only be charged to lawyers."

Jackson warned that all this leads to the growing attitude that judicial control of a court "is a sort of tyranny; that a courtroom ought to be a cockpit without rules, the trial a free-for-all, into which the participants are free to throw anything they please."

Appellate courts, he said, cannot protect a defendant against false or prejudicial evidence introduced by publicity.

Dear Son:

The golden ringlets that wreathe your happy little face will all too soon become the unruly stubble of a crew cut. And before long, those bright blue, trusting eyes will learn to tighten in skepticism as they view a world no longer new and wonderful and glittering. I can't do a thing about these changes, son, because they are in the nature of life.

But I can and will do something to help you keep forever some of the bright eagerness that makes every one of your todays a glorious and exciting adventure. I am asking a piano to come to live with us. I believe that for as long as you live, you will bless the day it is moved in.

MUSIC LESSONS
65c AND UP

If you have not yet learned the rich enjoyments and satisfactions good music can bring to you, allow me to recommend that you spend an evening at one of the Watergate Concerts some time this month. For the novice there can be no finer "music lesson" . . . for the accomplished musician no more gratifying experience. Admissions are as low as 65c. Concerts are scheduled for Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays during July. The location: The Watergate, adjoining Memorial Bridge. Time: 7:15 p. m. I had the happy good fortune to hear Alec Templeton and the National Symphony at the Watergate last week. The evening was balmy. A slight, cool breeze drifted in from the river, rustling the trees in gentle accompaniment to the music. Templeton was at his brilliant best, and the Orchestra, under Howard Mitchell's inspired leadership, performed superbly. I thought: "It's a pity more people aren't here to enjoy this!" and forthwith determined to tell you about it. Words can't do justice to the Watergate Concerts. But I can assure you that your drooping spirits will be lifted by your attendance, and your hot, tired body will appreciate the cool interval of relaxation! Why not go tonight?

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz

Information on Firing Incompetent Workers To Go to Dept. Chiefs

The Civil Service Commission, with the blessings of the President, will send a memo to department heads to explain to them in detail how incompetent employes can be fired speedily.

The staff of the Hoey committee is quizzing Federal officials behind closed doors on names, and records of sex perverts who are or were in the Federal service. Very few sex pervert cases have been uncovered by the staff despite charges there are thousands in the Government service here.

Mrs. Ruth Edna Somers, the widow of Representative Andrew Somers (D., N. Y.), is to be appointed to a Federal job with full Civil Service status on order by the President. Mr. Truman rarely uses this authority.

People who should know say that Oscar Ewing will resign as Federal Security administrator by early fall. The Democratic-controlled Congress has twice refused to give FSA Cabinet status, and on both occasions Ewing was the prime target of the opposition.

At Federal Communications, Edwin L. White and Lester W. Spillane are chief and assistant of the new safety and special radio services bureau. William N. Krebs is chief of the marine division; John R. Evans, chief aviation division; George K. Rollins, state-local government division chief; Glen E .Nielson, chief, industry and commerce; Charles R. Weeks, chief, authorization analysis, and Marshall S. Orr, chief, enforcement.

The military agencies are looking into the problems of greatly expanding their civilian staffs. That goes without saying because of the Korean crisis. But they face two minor hurdles which are: (1) money, and (2) personnel ceilings imposed by Congress.

The personnel ceilings are law. They can't be suspended by the President, the Budget Bureau, or any agency other than Congress. Budget Director Fred Lawton made that clear recently to the Services and to Congress. He urged the Congress to wipe out the ceiling law as it causes what he believes is a lot of unnecessary work for his agency.

The House has approved a bill to pay in cash all annual leave of more than 60 days accumulated by the commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, and to limit leave in the future to no more than an accumulation of that amount. Several years ago a similar law was passed for officers of the Army, Navy, and Marines. Most civilian Federal workers would welcome a similar law to cover them.

The Senate this week is expected to take up the President's veto of HR 87, the bill to raise the pay of 100,000 World War II veterans in the postal service. The House passed the bill over the veto. The Senate vote will be close. It could go either way. Senator Johnston (D., S. C.) will seek to override the veto. He'll call it up as soon as he returns from a brief holiday after his tough but successful re-election battle with Governor Thurmond.

The District Fed, the publication of the AFL's National Federation of Post Office Clerks here, carries a timely "Let's Cooperate" editorial in its latest issue. It says in part:

"No right thinking postal worker will believe that the postal curtailment order was the 'rape of the postal service' as stated by William Doherty, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. Neither do we believe that the leaders of postal organizations are guilty of 'gross insubordination' as charged by Deputy Postmaster General Vincent Burke.

"Such statements do not make pretty reading for Mr. Average Citizen who wonders what is happening within his once much-respected postal service. The gap between the department and the postal unions has reached a danger point, and it is high time that the brakes were applied . . . The department and the postal unions are here to stay; let's see them work together."

At Government Printing, Charles "Chilly" Barnard has retired after 26 years of outstanding service . . . At Interior, David E. Thomas of its Alaska branch, has retired after 43 years of service . . . James Barr of Interior's Bureau of Land Management reports that employe suggestions this year will save Uncle Sam about $10,000 annually . . . New employes at the Army Medical Center here include Henry E. Markell, John H. Mandell, Caspar W. Hiatt, Charles A. Johnson, Janis M. Rutherford, Doris Baysinger, Peggy Ann Bowser, Margaret Goodman, Sylvia Mandel, James B. Thomas, Charlotte Ott, and Beverly Martin.

Man's Death in Fall Is Ruled Accidental

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of accidental death in the case of a 28-year-old man who was found unconscious yesterday on the steps leading to the Dunbar Hotel barber shop.

Dr. MacDonald said James Lawrence Johnson, of 1312 Gallaudet st. ne., apparently fell down the steps, striking his head. Death was due to a fractured skull.

D. C. Crime, Defense, Milk Issues Up This Week

Cab Limitation, New Civil Airport Also Are Slated For 'Hill' Action

Action on local issues at the Capitol this week will run the gamut of civil defense, crime, milk, and taxicab limitation to a possible decision on a second civilian airport.

At 9:30 a. m. Monday all the members of the long-dormant District Crime Investigating subcommittee will appear at an open hearing before the House Accounts subcommittee to appeal for $20,000 more to wind up their probe.

Lack of committee quorums and questions about salaries paid crime committee staffers has held up approval of the extra funds the last two months.

Also on Monday, the House subcommittee on District appropriations will take up a request for $290,000 to finance a civil defense setup for the District. The Senate District Committee at a 2 p. m. meeting is expected to approve enabling legislation for the local preparedness program.

The Senate group also is scheduled to reconsider a once-rejected measure to limit the number of taxicabs in Washington.

Tuesday at 10 a. m., hearings will resume before a House District subcommittee on the Miller bill to open the Washington milk market to any farm whose milk meets U. S. Puplic Health Service standards.

Chances for early action on Senate-passed legislation for a second civilian airport were hinted yesterday by Chairman Lindley Beckworth (D., Tex.) of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce subcommittee on transportation.

He said he personally wanted to see his committee act "as soon as possible on means to secure additional civilian facilities in the area." He said the airport bill would be considered this or next week.

Sasscer Sees Passage of Firemen's Bill

Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.) yesterday predicted the Senate will pass his bill to authorize cooperation between Greater Washington fire departments.

Speaking at the dedication of Beltsville's new $30,000 fire house, the Maryland legislator said the measure will permit firemen to go to one another's aid in emergencies without loss of injury benefits. The bill has passed the House.

Mrs. Reuben Bogdanoff, president of the Prince Georges County League of Women Voters, urged all to get out and vote to show that the people of America are interested in making democracy work.

Others who spoke included W. Waverly Webb, clerk of the county Circuit Court; Harry W. McNamee, president of the Board of County Commissioners; Jerrold V. Powers, counsel to the commissioners.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad won two cups in the parade which preceded the dedication, one for coming the longest distance and another for having the most men in line; Landover Hills VFD won a cup for the best appearing pumper; Tuxedo-Cheverly VFD for the best appearing ladder truck; Beltsville for the best appearing women's auxiliary, and Berwyn Heights for the auxiliary coming the longest distance. The Junior Volunteer Fire Department of Savage won first and Guy M. Roby, a plumber, second prize for floats in the parade.

Woman Drops To Death From Hotel Window

A 38-year-old woman last night plunged to her death from a fourth-floor window at the Whitelaw Hotel, 1300 T st. nw., while a crowd looked on.

Killed instantly, she was identified by relatives as Miss Florine King, of 1415 11th st. nw.

Howard Fletcher, of 1907 13th st. nw., a passerby, told police he saw Miss King hanging from the window sill at about 7 p. m., and shouted to her to climb back.

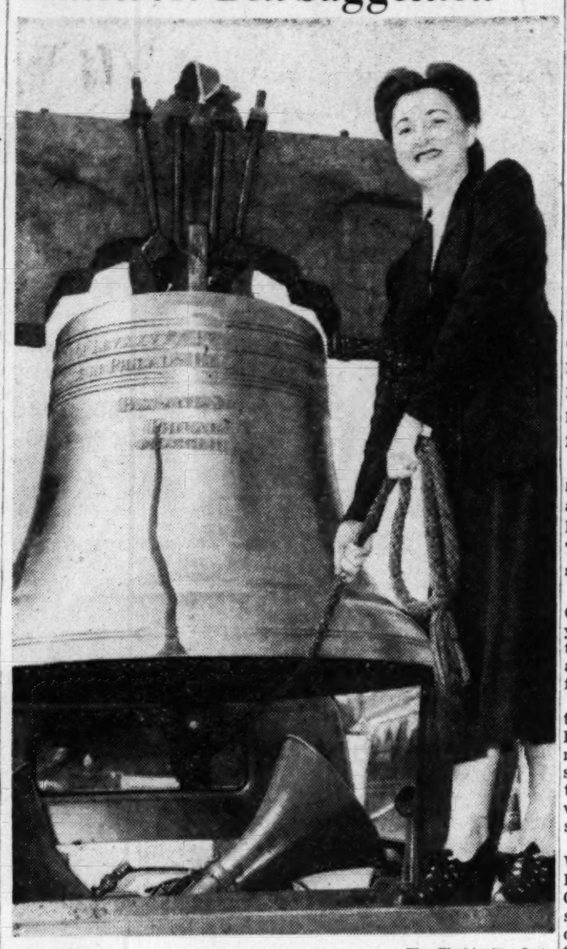
Fletcher said the woman looked as if she was trying to get back, but after a few moments of effort, her grip gave way.

Police Pvt. Charles P. Bielaski, of the Thirteenth Precinct, said she had registered at the hotel as husband and wife with a man who left earlier yesterday. There were no notes.

The dead woman's sister, Mrs. Alberta Butler, of the 1th st. address, said Miss King had left with a man some time Friday night. Miss King was unemployed.

In her pocketbook, police found several help wanted ads, and many clippings on the murders of two Lansburgh department store watchmen.

Bethesda Woman Wins Post Contest for Bell Suggestion



The Washington Post

SUGGESTED SITE—Mrs. Mary D. Panzer, of 11 Wilson la., Bethesda, Md., has been named winner of the savings bond offered by The Washington Post for her letter suggesting the triangle in front of the District Building as the permanent site for the replica of the Liberty Bell. The bell will be presented the District Thursday

A $25 savings bond will be sent to Mrs. Mary D. Panzer, 11 Wilson la., Bethesda, for her suggestion that Washington's replica of the Liberty Bell be placed in the park triangle in front of the District Building.

The Washington Post will forward to the District Commissioners Mrs. Panzer's suggestion for their consideration. The Commissioners have been asked by Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder to pick a location for the District's replica of the original bell which hangs in Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

Exact replicas of the Liberty Bell have been given each of the 48 states, the District of Columbia and the territories to stimulate savings bond sales. The bells were cast in 85 percent pure copper in France—like the original. The Post offered the savings bond prize for the best local site suggestion.

The triangle of land between 13½ and 14th streets nw, Pennsylvania ave and E st. is now occupied by a temporary frame structure housing offices of the D. C. Veterans Service Center.

Park Restoration Expected

It is expected that the structure will be razed and the park restored when other quarters are found for the service center.

Mrs. Panzer's prize winning letter stated she was suggesting the park across from the District building because, "in that location, the bell would be viewed by thousands daily and on special occasions when our parades progress from Capitol to White House."

It was pointed out that the bell would be in the background of civic celebrations welcoming distinguished visitors. Normally, such ceremonies are held on the steps of the District Building. (Since erection of the temporary building early in the last war, such ceremonies have been held in front of the Pennsylvania ave. entrance to the temporary building.)

The bell has been touring the city on a truck to advertise the bond drive. It will be presented formally to the District Thursday in noon ceremonies at the E st. entrance to the District building. Meanwhile, the prize-winning letter of Mrs. Panzer and the many other letters received in The Post contest have been made available to the Commissioners to assist them in selecting a site.

Letters received included suggestions to place the bell on the ground of the Capitol, White House, Washington Monument, Smithsonian Institution, National Gallery of Art and virtually every other shrine and point of civic interest in the Capital.

Mrs. Panzer is a widow and lives with her mother, Mrs. Roseann Shadel. She is employed by the Maritime Administration of the Commerce Department.

She is the mother of a recently married 19-year-old daughter, Mrs. Celeste Walt. Her husband died 15 years ago, and a 9-year-old son was killed accidentally nine years ago by a playmate with a .22 rifle.

A native of Booneville, Mo., "and proud of it," she lived there until coming to Washington 11 years ago.

Told on the telephone that she had won the contest, she exclaimed incredulously, "I did? It can't be. Oh, how wonderful!"

She is going to frame the savings bond, she said.

Others Urged Same Area

Others to urge a Post Square location as the permanent site for the District's bell—either the triangle, the E street entrance to the District Building, or inside the building—were:

Carleton F. Smith, 3012 Nelson pl. se.; Michael J. Dux, 3757 Gunston rd., Alexandria; Paul Turner, 626 D st. se.; Mrs. William Taylor Barry, 309 Rucker pl., Alexandria; Mrs. T. V. Moose, 1326 Fairmont st. nw.; Mrs. Angie Graham Kimberland, 1619 R st. nw.; Elsie M. Keneaster, care of Riggs National Bank, Park Road branch; John F. Ellis 921 New Hampshire ave. nw.; Alan Cunningham, 3210 Stephenson pl. nw., and Frank J. Hereford, 1405 Girard st. nw.

Edward C. Baltz, chairman of the District division of the 1950 Savings Bond Drive, which opened May 15 with a gentle bong of the original Liberty Bell in Philadelphia, and Commissioner John Russell Young will participate in the Thursday noon presentation ceremonies.

Theodore Granik, chairman of the National Broadcasting Company's "American Forum of the Air," will be master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, O. P., head of Catholic University's speech and drama department, will give the invocation. Marian Kiatta, of Loew's Capitol Theater, will sing, and the Metropolitan Police Band will play.

Naval Architect Who Feared Cancer Found Dead in Bed

William Ross Laurenson, 40, a naval architect with the Martime Commission, who reportedly feared he had cancer, was found dead in bed early yesterday by his wife.

Fairfax County Medical Examiner Dr. Emmanuel Newman issued a certificate of death due to poisoning.

Police said an empty bottle of sleeping tablets was discovered in the Laurenson home at 1672 Roberts la., Falls Church.

According to Fairfax Detective Sergt. Cecil Brown, Laurenson left a note to his wife, saying he "wanted rest" and hoped she had the strength to care for their four children.

Brown said Mrs. Laurenson told him her husband had feared he was suffering from cancer since he visited a doctor about a week ago. He was scheduled for another examination Thursday.

Mrs. Laurenson said she and her husband went to bed about 11:30 p. m. Friday. She heard him get up once in the night, she said, but paid no attention. About 6:40 a. m. she awoke and found he was dead.

Former residents of California, the Laurensons have lived in Fairfax about 14 months, police said.

The sponsors have invited about 450 orphanage children to be their guests from 1:30 to 4:30 p. m. on Thursday. The youngsters will be treated to rides, refreshments and prizes.

Police Seize Pair Near Open Safe

Fun Palace Entered, Machines Smashed; $663 Found in Bags Next to Receptacle

Two patrolling policemen, suspecting funny business in the Fun Palace, 1771 Columbia rd. nw., early yesterday, entered the building via the roof and found two cowering men, several wrecked pinball machines, plus $663 extracted from a forced safe.

Charged with housebreaking, grand larceny, and destroying movable property were Ralph E. Williams, 20, of 1815 10th st. nw., and Thomas F. Dawson, 22, of 1931 8th st. nw.

Arraigned before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence yesterday, their cases were continued until July 26. Bond was set at $10,000 for Dawson and at $7500 for Williams.

Police told this story of the capture: About 2:45 a. m. Pvt. Irving L. Lupini and Corpl. Jacob Brickman of the Tenth Precinct police station were checking door locks in the 1700 block of Columbia rd. when they heard noises from inside the Fun Palace.

They called for reinforcements. When several scout cars arrived, Lupini, Brickman and Pvt. David Gould of the Thirteenth Precinct station climbed to the roof of the one-story building via a handy tree and jumped into an enclosed areaway below.

They squeezed into the building through a narrow window, found Williams and Dawson crouching beneath some pinball machines. Unarmed, the two men surrendered peacefully.

According to the policemen, several of the machines had been smashed open and a safe in the rear office forced. About $683 in cash, stored in canvas bags, was propped beside the safe, they reported.

Police said Dawson's bond was set higher because he had been arraigned before Commissioner Lawrence Wednesday on a charge of breaking into a drug store at 701 Rhode Island ave. nw. on June 7 and stealing $736 worth of merchandise.

On the earlier charges, Dawson was held for action of the grand jury and released in $1500 bond.

Two Yeggs Escape As Manager Enters

The manager of the Century Metal Craft Co., 1116 O st. se., told police he surprised two yeggs as they were about to take $400 from his wrecked safe early yesterday, chased them from the building and lost them four blocks away.

Manager Eugene J. Malone said he returned to the building about 2 a. m. to pick up something he had forgotten. He said he found the men lifting the cash drawer from the safe. The safe's dial had been knocked off, but the intruders had chiseled through the back to reach the box, Malone reported. The men, empty handed, escaped along the railroad tracks nearby.

Youth, 21, Charged With Housebreaking

A 21-year-old youth, who told police he was master-minded by a 14-year-old girl, was charged with breaking into a 13th st. fur store yesterday.

Raymond Washington, 2211 M st. nw., was araigned before Judge Thomas D. Quinn in Municipal Court. He was held under $2000 bond for the grand jury.

Police said they found Washington on the roof of the Sperling Fur Store, 709 13th st. nw, at 2 a. m., after he had tripped a burglar alarm. He told police the girl directed the operation.

The girl was found inside the store, police said, and was turned over to juvenile authorities.

Police said the two admitted entering the store to get money. Washington was wearing a pair of ladies' gloves when arrested, police said.

Rape Charged To Mechanic In Falls Church

A 27-year-old Falls Church mechanic, charged with rape on complaint of an Arlington housewife, was released in $5000 bond yesterday.

The mechanic, William Wesley Newlon of 613 Wescott rd., Falls Church, was arrested about 6 a. m. while home in bed. Preliminary hearing was set for Wednesday in Fairfax Trial Justice Court.

The 24-year-old woman told Lieut. Grafton Wells, Fairfax detective chief, the offense occurred about 1 a. m. in Newlon's car, near Sleepy Hollow in Fairfax.

Wells said she told police she went out riding with Newlon and another man earlier in the evening. The trio stopped for a few beers somewhere in Maryland and the second man was let out of the car before the alleged attack took place, Wells quoted her as saying.

Police said Newlon denied the charge.

Young Drug Addicts Known, But Police Hampered by Laws

By Jean Reiff and Charles E. Davis, Jr.
Post Reporters

Police have known about a gang of youthful drug addicts in the District for more than six months but have been powerless to act.

Three of the gang—which numbers about 15—were among five youths arrested Friday and charged with stealing jewelry and hardware to buy heroin.

"We know they're taking the stuff," said Lieut. H. H. Carper, head of the police narcotics squad, "but we can't do anything. There's no law here against taking drugs, only against sale and possession.

"And we can't nail anyone on possession unless we arrest them on some other charge and find the stuff on them."

Carper and his aide, Detective Sergt. William Taylor, pointed out that in Kentucky a known or admitted drug addict can be jailed as a felon or committed to a hospital for treatment.

The District has no such law.

Philadelphia Method

They pointed out, too, that in Philadelphia if police receive a complaint that someone has drugs in his possession, they can make a search and if they find the drugs can arrest the person.

The District has no such law.

United States Attorney George Morris Fay said drug addiction among the youth of the city is "a serious problem." However, he said he would have to do considerable research before he could say whether a new law is needed in the District to cope with the problem.

Carper, who has handled narcotics cases for 15 years, said he did not recall any cases of youthful drug addicts until about three years ago.

Then, last year, just before Christmas, his squad received information about 15 youths in their late teens and early 20s who had become heroin addicts.

Use a Needle

They buy the heroin in powder form in a capsule, dilute it and inject it into their arms with a hypodermic needle. That gives them their "buzz" — addict slang for thrill.

The boys, Carper said, come from better than average families, but all have apparently been "problem" kids. Most of them quit school in the tenth or eleventh grade, then began hanging around with the gang. Some of the group first met at Eastern High School, others at Central High School.

How did the boys get started? One or two of them probably were encouraged to try it by an adult addict, police believe. Then it spread to the other boys who wanted a thrill, wanted to try something new.

Parents of several of the boys became aware of the situation and went to police. Carper and Taylor did what they could. They talked to seven of the boys at police headquarters, trying to bring home to them how vicious the drug habit is.

By this time most of the youths were addicts and the two shots a day (or "pops," as they are known to the addict) had increased to five and six shots.

"They need one to go to sleep on and one to wake up on," said Carper.

Police could not compel the boys to submit to treatment but three of them volunteered to go to the United States Public Health Service Hospital for drug addicts at Lexington, Ky.

The cure didn't take for Herbert T. Freeman, 20, one of the three. He returned to Washington recently after spending three months at the hospital, Carper said. Freeman was one of the five youths arrested Friday on grand larceny charges.

Tell of Buying Drug

The five told police they bought their heroin from a man named "Jake" in the vicinity of a restaurant in the 1100 block of 7th st. nw. Others, Carper said, buy their stuff from dope peddlers in theaters, hotels and private homes.

The bigshot peddlers won't touch the kids. They're too hot. But the smallshot peddlers are glad to get the $1.50 a capsule the boys pay.

About five of these minor peddlers have been arrested in recent weeks, according to Carper, among them a woman who is awaiting trial on narcotics charges.

"The way to stop these kids," the detective declared, "is to get at the source—the peddler."

Can Recommend Treatment

Even when police can arrest an addict—say for housebreaking or grand larceny—they can only recommend hospital treatment to the United States Attorney.

When the case comes before the trial judge, if either side suggests hospital treatment, the judge can send the defendant to Lexington. Such commitments are usually for a year, never less than six months.

When Freeman and Edward D. Monahan, 18, were arrested Friday on grand larceny charges with their three companions, they gave police their address as 3120 Channing st. ne. However, Mrs. Lola Lohman, who lives at that address, said yesterday neither of the youths live there.

Narcotic Prescription Forgery Is Charged

Morris A. Katz, 36, operator of a restaurant at 800 K st. nw., was arrested last night and charged with forging a narcotics prescription.

Detective Sergt. William Taylor was making a routine check through prescription slips of the Day Drug Co., 14th and P sts. nw., and came across one for demerol, a synthetic drug, that had been filled for Katz.

It bore the signature of Dr. Arthur H. Lewis, of 1714 Rhode Island ave. nw., but Taylor, who had seen the doctor's signature on prescriptions previously, thought it did not look quite right.

Dr. Lewis denied he wrote the prescription, police said, and, also, denied knowing Katz.

Katz was released in $1000 bond and will be arraigned before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence Monday.

Williamsburg Printing Office To Be Open to Public July 25

The Colonial printing office at Williamsburg, Va., rebuilt as part of the restoration of Virginia's Colonial capital, will be opened to the public July 25.

Said to house the only authentic pre-Revolutionary press in operation, the building will become part of the town of more than 300 Colonial buildings restored or rebuilt according to original plans in the last 20 years.

It was on July 25, 1776, that the Declaration of Independence was officially proclaimed at Williamsburg. Next week's opening ceremony will include a procession along Duke of Gloucester st. at 2:30 p. m. and a reading of the Declaration at the printing office. Members of the cast of "The Common Glory"—the historical drama presented each summer—will take part.

Speakers at the July 25 ceremony will include Edwin S. Friendly, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, and John B. Hagerty, president of the International Allied Printing Trades Council.

15-Cent Fare Starts Today On Capital Transit Lines

New Token Rate Is Three for 40c; Weekly Pass Cost Increased to $2

Higher fares on Capital Transit streetcars and buses in the District are effective at 5 a. m. this morning.

In accordance with a Public Utilities Commission ruling of June 28, cash fares go up from 13 to 15 cents, tokens from three for 35 cents to three for 40 cents, and the weekly pass is now up a quarter to $2.

The new pass—same style except for the price—went on sale yesterday.

Some of the five million new tokens, which were bought before the price rise was granted, were distributed to operators on the early-morning runs. They are silver in color.

The old copper-colored tokens may be used until August 15 when accompanied by two cents each.

The company will begin redeeming the old tokens on Monday, at the rate of three for 35 cents. For less than three, the tokens will be redeemed at 11 cents for one and 23 cents for two.

Up to 30 tokens per customer will be redeemed at Capital Transit's nine division offices, the charter coach office at 1416 F st. nw., the lost and found office at 3222 M st. nw., and the main office at 36th and M sts. nw.

More than 30 tokens should be taken to the main office for redemption. E. C. Giddings, Capital Transit vice president, said the main office would handle the larger amounts because of the larger sums of money involved.

Information on the location of the nine division offices may be obtained by calling Michigan 6363.

Board Adopts Zoning Plan In Arlington

The Arlington County Board yesterday unanimously adopted revisions to its current zoning map and ordinance, under study for nearly three years.

The revised county zoning map increases apartment-zoned acreage by approximately one percent of total land. Commercial land is up a fraction of one percent, and total industrial acreage will be increased by a little more than one percent.

The ordinance provides that the county board will meet in May and November, instead of monthly as at present, to hear rezoning requests.

Both the new land use map and ordinance will become effective in August, following advertisement.

The board was informed yesterday by County Manager A. T. Lundberg that Arlington could pave its own streets for an estimated $118,205 this year. In the past, such work has been done by contract.

Possibility that the county would do its own street work arose last week after a second set of bids on the project was opened.

Low bid, from the Arlington Asphalt Co., was $145,200 for asphalt surfacing. The firm offered to do the same job for $119,480 in June, but all bids offered at that time were discarded because of a technical flaw in the bid advertisement.

Polio Situation In Area Not Near Epidemic

The polio situation in the District is not so serious as the sharp increase last week in cases reported might indicate, a District Health official said yesterday.

Seven new cases of polio were reported in the city last week, bringing the 1950 total to 18. Last year at this time only five had been reported.

But Dr. Carl G. Dauer, director of the Health Department's bureau of preventable diseases, also gave these cheerier statistics:

1. None of the District's 1950 victims has died. In fact, none of these cases has been serious enough to require use of a respirator.

2. In only one of the cases reported last week did paralysis occur.

3. Three of the Washington area cases hospitalized in the city last Monday had been discharged by Friday. That left 21 area victims in Washington hospitals.

Dauer said the number of cases reported in the District is only one tenth of what would be considered an epidemic. But he advised parents to postpone, if possible, nose and throat operations on children until the polio rate starts going down.

GI's Wife Missing Since Wednesday

The 29-year-old wife of a Bolling Air Base sergeant, a recent victim of a nervous breakdown, has been missing since Wednesday, police reported yesterday.

Mrs. Malonson

They said Mrs. Alice G. Malonson hasn't been heard from since 12:30 p. m. Wednesday, when she left her husband and in-laws in their auto, saying she wasn't feeling well and would walk home to 1050 Barnaby tr. se.

Her husband, Tech. Sergt. Wilfred Malonson, said his wife appeared in good spirits when he came home shortly before noon Wednesday to lunch with her, and his mother, sister and brother who were visiting from Asheville, N. C.

After lunch, they decided to show the visitors around Bolling Air Force Base. After they had driven about three blocks on Wheeler rd., he said, his wife complained of feeling ill.

Since she appeared all right and insisted on walking back, they let her out and continued, Malonson said. Mrs. Malonson is a registered nurse.

The sergeant described his wife as 4 feet, 11 inches tall, weighing 95 pounds, with dark brown, red-tinted hair and brown eyes.

She was wearing a brown cotton print dress with short sleeves, black shoes, and had a bag containing her Bolling identification and about $10.

The Malonsons have no children and have been here since October.

Bread Price Probe Urged

A one-cent-a-loaf increase in bread prices, put in effect here yesterday on two brands and announced for Monday by three other major bakers, has brought a demand for an immediate Congressional investigation.

Representative Daniel J. Flood (D., Pa.) called the price boosts an "obvious attempt at war scare profiteering," and said he would introduce a resolution in the House Monday for an inquiry.

Bakery spokesmen said the price rises, the first in three years, were made necessary by higher labor and flour costs. They also maintained prices here are among the lowest in the major American cities.

Retailers reported the price of Bond and Rice's bread, made by General Baking Co., went up with yesterday's deliveries, and was passed on in many cases to the customers.

One-cent boosts were announced for Monday by the Charles Schneider Baking Co., Continental Baking Co., makers of Wonder and County Fair bread, and Holzbeierlein & Sons, Inc., makers of Bamby bread.

DAV Here Asks Full Benefits For U. S. Combatants in Korea

The District Department of the Disabled American Veterans yesterday asked for legislation to provide United States combatants in Korea with all benefits now enjoyed by World War II veterans.

The resolution was adopted by delegates to the department's annual convention in its final business session yesterday at the Burlington Hotel.

Another resolution adopted asked for legislation to dney citizenship to aliens who object to bearing arms in defense of the United States.

The delegates also requested a new formula for veterans' preference in civil service procedures.

The new formula requested would require a passing grade on Civil Service exams before any veterans' preference would be granted; and would require at least 10 percent disability before the full veterans' preference would be granted.

The group elected Albert C. Allen, of 25 Mississippi ave. se., to succeed William T. Slattery as department commander.

Others elected were James E. Armstrong, senior vice commander; Isadore E. Halpern, junior vice commander; Rhogatan A. Rhoades, chaplain; Raymond K. Wiper, treasurer.

At a convention banquet last night, Chester F. Naumowicz, manager of the VA regional office here, said the Hoover Commission proposals to merge all Federal hospitals would be an economy measure at the expense of disabled veterans.

Korea Plight Laid To Tardy Actions

Crewe, Va., July 15 (AP).—A Virginia Congressman charged today the American "downfall" in Korea is the result of a "too-little, too-late" attitude by both the Administration and Congress.

Furthermore, Representative Watkins M. Abbitt (D., Va.), told approximately 5000 members of the Southside Electric Co-operative at their fourteenth annual meeting and picnic here, "the cold war is over and we are virtually in a state of war."

The Fourth District Congressman hastened to add that he was in accord with President Truman's action regarding the invasion of South Korea. But he turned some more criticism on the Government for not granting arms to South Korean forces prior to the present war.

Speaking several hours after Abbitt, Virginia's Gov. John S. Battle also touched on the Korean situation and said it may require that the "full resources of our Nation again must be marshaled" in the attempt to defeat "unprovoked aggression" in South Korea.

Morrison Says Judge Bazile Libeled Him

Fredericksburg, Va., July 15 (AP). Commonwealth's Attorney Horace T. Morrison today termed "libelous" statements Judge Leon M. Bazile made about a letter Morrison wrote to Governor Battle.

There were reports in the fifteenth judicial district that Morrison would file a libel suit against the judge—reports that Morrison did not deny.

"Judge Bazile called my letter to Governor Battle a tissue of lies. That is libelous," Morrison said.

The letter that is the center of the latest phase of the Bazile controversy is one Morrison sent to the governor on June 26. It attacked the competency of Judge Bazile, charging him with "flagrant disregard of judicial procedure" and requested a special session of the General Assembly to investigate his fitness for the bench. Governor Battle decided against calling the special session.

On Friday Judge Bazile instituted contempt action against the prosecutor.

Immediately after papers were served on Morrison—he was in court at the time—the prosecutor asked William J. Gibson, a Fredericksburg attorney, to defend him. Gibson, who has been a critic of Bazile, today declined to take the case.

Service Cases Crowded Out of VA Hospitals By Others, Hoover Report Committee Charges

Nearly 4000 combat veterans have been "shunted out" of Veterans Administration hospitals to "make room for those whose disabilities were incurred outside the service," the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report charged yesterday.

Dr. Robert L. Johnson, chairman of the citizens committee, made public a letter he has sent Gen. Carl R. Gray, Veterans Administrator. He charged Gray with "great inconsistency" in his testimony July 10 before the Senate Labor Committee in opposition to a bill for a united medical administration. The Hoover Commission recommended such a move, to consolidate all Federal hospitals.

The transcript shows Grey testified he is "using private hospitals for service-connected cases, which gives me space in veterans' hospitals to take care of nonservice

An official VA report shows that in May there were 3993 service-connected and 6326 nonservice-connected cases in non-Veterans Administration hospitals, Johnson pointed out.

'The Nation needs to know all the facts about this," he wrote Gray. "In opposing a united medical administration you say 'the high standard of care which has been attained by the VA would necessarily be lowered by a merger of our program with other programs.'

"Yet your records show that 3993 of our most deserving veterans, those who were wounded or injured in combat or training, have been shunted out of veterans' hospitals into other institutions to make room for those whose disabilities were incurred outside the service."

The plane left Miami June 9 for Maracaibo and was not heard from again.

How to Clear Bats From Attic, Not Belfry

Bats and how to shoo them out of your attic is the subject of Representative Burr P. Harrison's weekend message to his Virginia constitutents in the Seventh District.

The Democratic congressman tells the bat-plagued:

"One of the best ways to rid your attic of bats is to sit up waiting for the little varmits to leave for their nightly hunt for insects and then slam the window in their fuzzy faces, thus preventing their return."

Harrison makes no pretense of being a bat expert. He admits all his bat dope comes straight from the United States Fish and Wild Life Service.

The congressman became 'batconcious, he explained, through seeking to help a constituent whose attic had been invaded by the flying rodents.

Said Harrison: "A rodent-control expert admitted the bat problem had been given long and serious consideration without producing a foolproof—or batproof—answer."

The bat problem is "largely psychological," Harrison quoted his Wildlife source as saying. "As a matter of fact, bats are quite beneficial, considering the number of insects they destroy.

"The specialist said one of the best ways found for evicting them, however, was to close all attic openings, except one. (If there's only one window, or other entry, the job is half done.)"

Lists Other Suggestions

Shutting the open window or ventilator should end the nuisance, provided screening is installed before the openings are used again, he added.

Harrison passed along two other suggestions:

1. Spray the attic with a residual DDT solution.
2. Sprinkle naphthalene flakes, or scatter mothballs around the attic.

"Belfries," Harrison concluded, "are another matter."

Shower Steam Scalds Man To Death

A 36-year-old janitor was killed early yesterday morning by steam from a shower in a basement apartment at 2701 Wisconsin ave. nw.

Police said the janitor Morris Page died of inflammation of the lungs, caused by inhaling steam, and third degree burns, also caused by steam, over one third of his body.

Page's nude body was found lying under a bedroom window. Nearby was a steel venetian blind which Page had apparently clawed down in an effort to find and open the window. His hand was cut.

Police said they had reports that Page suffered from epilepsy, and said he may have suffered an attack before he was burned to death. Page never entered the shower, police said.

Tenants reported they heard water running in the basement shortly before 10 a. m. The resident manager, Mrs. Mary Louise Adams called police and summoned a neighboring janitor.

When police arrived in the basement apartment, they said the steam was so dense that they were forced to shut off the apartment water system to stop the shower.

Police said Page had apparently entered the apartment, which was vacated Friday night, some time after 5 a. m., yesterday to clean it, and decided to take a shower.

Page was pronounced dead on the scene, and Coroner Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of accidental death.

Stickup Is Not Worth a Toot as Driver Honks, Too

Memphis, Tenn., July 15 (AP).—Mrs. Frank T. Balton was driving along peacefully on a busy street last night when a car pulled up beside her with its horn blowing.

"Stop," shouted the driver. "Your car is on fire!"

She stopped.

So did the other motorist, who then slid into her car, pulled a gun and muttered: "This is a stickup."

Mrs. Balton had a trick of her own. She blew her horn, too, and screamed. The aggressor fled.

Hot Race for D. C. Command to Highlight Legion Convention

A hot race for commander is expected to highlight the thirty-second annual convention of the District Department, American Legion, which opens at the Shoreham Hotel Thursday evening.

Four candidates, including a descendant of General Grant and a namesake of General Lee, are seeking the department's top post. They are:

Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant 3d, grandson of the former President and Union Army commander. He is vice president George Washington University.

Walter Lee Morgan, jr., named after the Confederate Army commander. He is a controller at the World Bank and was graduated from George Washington University last year.

Gail T. Judd, former captain of the National Guard of Honor, a retired Government employe.

John J. McGinty former department adjutant and a Department of Justice attorney.

Legion veterans predict the main contest for commander will be between 69-year-old Grant, a prominent local civic leader, and Morgan, a 29-year-old veteran of World War II who has come up fast in the Legion here.

Morgan is being supported by a steering committee headed by Fred Fraser. Grant is being backed by a group headed by Charles Kohen.

Here's a brief review of the candidates' background:

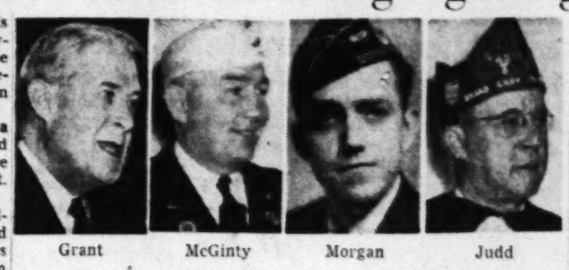
Grant—A member of the Costello Post, he joined Cooley-McCullough Post in 1942, and was elected post commander in 1948. He headed the department's Red Cross Committee, and was chairman of its Housing Committee and of its Law and Order Committee. He also was active on the department Juvenile Delinquency Committee.

Maj. Gen. Grant was retired from the Army in 1946 after 43 years of service. He is a graduate of Columbia University and the United States Military Academy. served in both World Wars, has received numerous decorations. He was chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Board from 1942 to 1949.

Morgan—A former commander of Kenna-Main Post and a former department commander, he is presently a member of the Department's Civil Relations Commission and chairman of the department's upcoming convention.

During World War II he served as a B-24 bomber pilot with the Seventh Air Force, and after three years' service, came out a first lieutenant. A native of Alabama, Morgan served once as a House of Representatives page boy.

Judd, a member of the Henry C. Spengler Post, served with the Government and put in 31 years' service with the Legion. He participated in the Mexican border war with the Infantry and in World War I with the Navy, rising from apprentice seaman to ensign. He is an organizer of George Washington Post and headed Department of Labor Post. In the department served as chairman of trophies and awards and Flag Day committees.



Grant McGinty Morgan Judd

He also served as head of the Past Commanders Association, Army and Navy Union, department adjutant. He won the Watson B. Miller Trophy as the outstanding Legionnaire in 1945. He is chairman of Selective Service Board No. 23, and has served as director of the District's annual soap box derby.

McGinty—A former commander of Department of Justice Post, he served the Department as judge advocate, finance officer, and member of the Americanism Commission; in the national Legion, he was a member of the Armistice Day, Aeronautics, and Law and Order committees.

In World War II, McGinty served as both an enlisted man and officer. He served as counsel for the House Naval Affairs Committee before entering war service. He's been a trial attorney with Justice Department since 1945.

The Department convention will elect, besides the commander, five vice commanders, a national executive committeemen and alternate and delegates and alternates for the national convention to be held in Los Angeles next fall. Fifty resolutions are expected to come up before the delegates.

The convention will open at 6:30 p. m. Thursday with a motorcade from the Mall to the Shoreham Hotel. Senator John J. Sparkman (D., Ala.) will be the principal speaker that evening. Friday evening the delegates will hear Past National Commander Paul H. Griffith, Assistant Secretary of Defense. Elections will be held Saturday. The District Department of the American Legion today consists of 60 posts and 17,500 members.

Congressional Library to Get Atomic Data

If you're interested in delving into the atomic pile—of information, that is—you'll be able to do so at the Library of Congress in about two weeks.

The Library of Congress is among 31 libraries in various parts of the country designated by the Atomic Energy Commission as official depositories of atomic energy research reports, the AEC has announced.

Don't expect to find any secret information, however, as these reports are unclassified, or have been declassified.

You will find plenty of material. At present, there are about 3500 reports in a full set, and some 1500 new ones come out each year.

Each library agreed to provide public access to the reports, reference service and photo copies at established prices.

The AEC said the materials would be sent out in a week or two. The 31 libraries, located in 21 States and the District near major centers of scientific and industrial activity, were suggested at the request of AEC by the board on resources of American libraries of the American Library Association. They include both university and public libraries.

Refugee Aid Held Christian Obligation

Toronto, July 15 (U.P.).—The central committee of the World Council of Churches said today that Christians have an "inescapable obligation" to stand by the nine million refugees of western Europe.

The 90-member policy-making committee condemned the actions of any government which have increased the numbers of the homeless.

"The refugee problem is not an isolated misfortune," the committee said. "It is a judgment upon our whole society." It said refugees are placing an intolerable burden upon the resources of Austria, Germany and France.

The committee, winding up a week-long session, said it would meet next year in Geneva, Switzerland.

Earlier it issued a statement opposing the "exploitation of non-self-governing peoples and the flagrant violations of human rights, discrimination of segregation on the grounds of race or color."

Four new church groups joined the council, bringing to 45 the countries represented. The new groups, with a membership of almost 500,000, are the Federal Synod of the Lutheran Church in Brazil, the Church of Central Java, the Methodist Church of Ceylon and the Synod of the Evangelical Church of North Iran.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Heading Into a War Economy

This is where an awful lot of people came in. It's discombobolation, the word President Roosevelt coined in May, 1940, when he told reporters that he hoped the defense program would not upset the normal habits of the country too much.

Livingston

The Korean discombobolation is already evident in Wall Street. The stock market is down 13 percent from its June high. General Motors, which sold at $99 after the company announced plans for a two-for-one stock splitup, dropped to below $80. Television stocks likewise were badly mauled. Admiral slumped from $36 a share before Korea to $20; Philco from $49 to $33; RCA from $22 to $15; Zenith from $63 to $40.

That's Wall Street's way of saying we're heading into a war economy. Automobile companies are great users of steel. But if steel is needed for tanks, shells, ammunition cases, and so on, fewer autos will be made. Television production likewise will be cut. Electronic parts will be diverted to signal and detection equipment for the armed forces.

Priorities All Over Again?

President Truman, Chairman Symington of the National Security Resources Board and Secretary of Defense Johnson now face the task of building up war production fast. That goes beyond merely placing orders. They must see to it that the companies which get war orders receive deliveries from their suppliers; that their suppliers, in turn receive deliveries from their suppliers and so on—right down the line to raw materials, steel, copper, aluminum.

Clearing such a circuit was accomplished during the last war only through priorities. Thus, Truman, Symington and Johnson must determine to what extent the Korean crisis requires the institution of controls over the flow of materials and supplies.

The personal problem, for any businessman, is this: He wants to work on defense production. He's patriotic, isn't he? His customers are patriotic too. But they haven't had the direct order from the Department of Defense. They're clamoring for deliveries—else their competitors will march merrily ahead of them.

Priorities—controls—cut through this pressure. Under a priority, the businessman who gets a war order has no choice but to fill it. The problem goes even deeper than priorities. Will the companies be willing to clear floor space and provide managerial talent for war production—to the detriment of their civilian operations?

Capacity Greater Now

When Germany marched into Poland, businessmen welcomed war orders. The steel industry was operating at only 72 percent of capacity. In June, 1940, when France fell, steel operations were only 84 percent. Not so today, when steel is around 100 percent of capacity. Yet, then, war production didn't really get rolling until strict limitations were placed on civilian production, until passenger automobile output was stopped.

No such drastic "stop-production" order now impends. For one thing, we have greater automobile and steel capacity today than in 1939 and 1940. We can have guns and some butter too. For another thing, converting to a full-scale war economy now would be a gamble—an all-out bet on an all-out war. At the same time, it's conceivable that definite percentage cutbacks of civilian production may be ordered. That would serve a three-fold purpose:

1. Automatically cut down civilian demand for steel, copper, textiles, and so on.
2. Free plant space and managerial skill for war work.
3. Put all competitors on the same footing in relation to "business as usual."

That would be a step toward partial, industrial mobilization. For this much emerges from the Korean conflict. The United States will be on a war footing for a long time to come. Defense expenditures may easily double. (That's why Secretary of the Treasury Snyder suggested to Congress to defer action on a tax bill.) Personal and corporation taxes may have to go up. Result: The businessman can now regard Uncle Sam as a regular customer, not a buyer who vanishes with peace.

Labor Turnover Lessened

Meanwhile, the Korean discombobolation comes at a time when the country has finally gotten readjusted after the last war. Not only has production risen to a new postwar high, but workers have settled down. Labor turnover is at the lowest level in five years. Quits today are running at a rate of only about 10 to 20 per thousand workers per month. Just after the war, when GIs took jobs they weren't quite suited for, when many round pegs were in square holes, the quit rate ran above 50 per thousand workers (see chart).

As war production increases, quits will increase. Workers in low-paying nonwar jobs will probably shift to higher-paying war industries. Layoffs may increase, too, if cutbacks in civilian output are ordered. But for the most part, companies will try to hold onto workers. Labor will presumably be in scarce supply.

WHISTLING WHILE THEY WORK
Workers are better adjusted to jobs and quit less. Layoffs lower than '49.

Maryland Tobacco

Baltimore, July 15 (AP).—The heaviest volume of tobacco in nearly two months was auctioned on the Southern Maryland leaf markets this week.

The Federal-State Tobacco Market News Service reported today that 3,256,452 net pounds were sold for an average price of $45.83 per hundredweight.

The price average was the lowest of the season and a drop of $3.45 from the previous week. The quality of tobacco showed little change.

General rains over the marketing area have been favorable for the handling of the leaf.

Net sales at auction through the season reached 27,571,527 pounds at an average of $48.47 per hundredweight.

Average prices declined for almost two thirds of the grades sold. Most losses were from $1 to $3 per 100 pounds. A few offerings made advances of similar amounts. Also, several thin crop grades continued steady.

Smaller percentages of low quality marketings appeared on the floors. The ratio of heavy crop was smaller. However, tip offerings increased slightly.

The Maryland Tobacco Cooperative received about 6½ percent of auction sales during the week under the Government loan program. Deliveries to the cooperative for the season stand at around 7½ percent.

Net receipts of the Baltimore hogshead market for the season were reported as approximately 4,225,000 pounds. Hogshead and leaf auction sales thus have a combined total volume of about 31,800,000 pounds.

The Crop Reporting Board set the 1950 production of Southern Maryland tobacco at 34,300,000 pounds as of July 1. If realized, the production this year would be about 16 per cent under the estimate for the 1949 crop, which is now being sold.

Auction bid averages per 100 pounds on a limited number of representative grades, with changes from last week, follow:

Heavy crop: Good cherry red, $65, down $1; fair cherry red, 60, down 1; fair red, 38, down 2; fair green, 17.50, down 2; low red, 24, down 3.

Tips: Fair cherry red, 45, down 2; fair red, 29, down 2; low green, 13.50, up 50 cents.

Thin crop: Fine cherry red, 69, down 1; good buff, 68, unchanged; good cherry red, 68, unchanged; fair cherry red, 66, down 1; fair red, 63, down 1; low cherry red, 63, down 1.

Riggs' Historic Ads Again Put In Book Form

By S. Oliver Goodman

Riggs National Bank has reproduced in book form a second series of advertisements based upon people and events in its 114-year history.

Carr

The first series in 1948, published in Washington newspapers, attracted national attention and were described as advertising classics. This second series, published in 1949 and 1950, excited equal interest.

Credit for the attractive and interesting book goes to Roland Carr, Riggs' vice president and advertising officer, who originated and wrote the advertising and history in collaboration with Hulbert T. Bisselle, Riggs' senior vice president.

Development, editing and technical presentation was by John F. Hardie, of Lewis Edwin Ryan Advertising Agency in Washington.

An innovation in the latest book is a 150-year history of Washington, written around a number of famous checks from the Riggs' collection. This presentation was aimed to coincide with the city's Sesquicentennial.

The first check shown is one drawn May 9, 1800, by Stephen Decatur. Population of Washington then approximated 3000. With other notables' checks through the years, descriptive matter traces the city's growth and highlights. For instance, along with a draft by Abraham Lincoln in 1863: " . . . Population increased enormously during the war; hostelries were overcrowded and rentable houses soon taken at exorbitant rates. Washington's population doubled from 61,000 in 1860 to 140,000 in 1863."

Last reproduced check is one for $50 million drawn by the Union of South Africa to the Treasurer of the United States, repaying that nation's lend-lease obligations. Incidentally, according to Riggs National, this is the largest check ever drawn on a bank in the District of Columbia.

BEER: Washington ranked 10th last year in per capita consumption of beer and ale among the States, according to the 1950 edition of the Brewers Almanac just published by the U. S. Brewers Foundation. Consumption totaled 599,086 barrels, or an average of 21.3 gallons per person here. The 1949 figure compared with 584,803 barrels in 1948.

LOAN RATE UP: The average rate of interest charged on loans to business concerns by New York city banks moved slightly higher between March and June, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reported. Despite this increase, the bank said, the rate remained approximately at or below the rates charged in June, 1949. The average rate on demand loans or those due within one year was 2.34 per cent in the first half of June, compared with 2.28 percent in the first half of March and 2.33 percent in the first half of June, 1949. Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 15 (AP).—Soybeans and lard soared again on the Board of Trade today, running away from the reluctant grains.

July soybeans rose 10 cents within 10 minutes of the opening. It then fell back several cents, only to come ahead again toward the finish. This delivery set a new seasonal high, but the new crop months, although sharply higher, did not get into new price territory.

Grains slumped at the opening. Once the soybean and lard advance got under way, however, cereals joined the upward movement, recovering early losses to end with small gains. Buying followed news of additional advances of North Korean troops in the Korean war.

Wheat ended ¼-⅞ higher, corn ⅜ to 1 cent higher, oats unchanged to ¾ higher, rye unchanged to ½ higher, soybeans 5¼-9¼ higher and lard 40 to 50 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Brokers attributed the sharp run-up in July soybeans at the start to technical market conditions, there being no word of any sale of beans or bean oil to foreign countries. A part of the short interest, which is still quite large, apparently decided to cover. That started it. Once the July contract had broken its previous seasonal high, stop loss orders placed in the market by shorts were touched off.

Stocks Regain Part of Losses In Late Rally

New York, July 15 (AP). — The stock market rounded out a losing week with a last-minute stab at stability.

On Friday the market advanced for the first time during the week.

Friday marked the end of the third week that the market has had to evaulate the results of President Truman's revision of our Far Eastern policy.

The decline, of course, is no measure of approval or disapproval of a new foreign policy. It represents the first shocked response to what may turn out to be a chance, modified or not, from a peace to a war economy.

Several times during the week the market tried to dig in for a rally. Even the Friday advance, however, had no real strength. When the market closed for the week prices were gently settling.

The week's gyrations in the exchange were again compounded mainly of a mixture of confusion, hope and fear. Now and then a dash of common sense was evident but the other flavors were too strong for the latter to make much impression.

Tuesday's market, for instance, was one of the most remarkable displays that Wall Street has seen in a long time. The market closed with a sizable over-all loss after heavy trading and a zig-zag price course. The price pattern was foggy, to say the least.

Not only did the market perform with extraordinary agility but the financial district offered an extraordinary variety of opinion for the market's action. Rumors of a peace offensive, some said, touched off heavy selling. Other brokers were just as sure that peace rumors acted as a prop under declining prices.

By the weekend the fog showed signs of lifting. The fear of higher taxes came into sharper focus as a major price depressant. At the same time the picture was still clouded because no one really knew what the Korean war might eventually kindle.

The fear of a tax increase sharpened after a Senate committee, at the suggestion of the Administration, shelved a bill cutting excise taxes.

Reassurance was quickly forthcoming from congressional leaders that an increase in the corporate tax rate or a return to the excess profits tax was not immediately likely. This reassurance was credited with helping the market on Friday.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 16, 1950

Hard Road to Peace Doesn't End at 38th Parallel

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

WHILE most Americans kept their eyes on the Korean fighting front last week, a few planners in Washington were looking ahead to the time when the fighting would be over.

They were planning, of course, on the basis of a United Nations victory that would put the blue-and-white U. N. flag on the thirty-eighth parallel.

President Truman talked confidently of getting back to the boundary line from which the Communists launched their invasion. A reporter asked him whether he thought General MacArthur's troops could keep a foothold in Korea.

The grim news from the battlefield had not shaken the President's determination. If he had even a flicker of fear that the Army might be pushed into the sea, he did not show it. We will keep our foothold, he said, as far north on the thirty-eighth parallel.

This was his way of saying that the United States and the U. N. would persevere until every foot of ground lost to the Communists had been regained.

But what happens then? What happens when the North Koreans have been defeated, their aggression repelled and the independence of the South Koreans restored? Or what would happen if the Kremlin should decide unexpectedly to get out of its Korean adventure and come back to the United Nations, as Prime Minister Nehru of India wants Premier Stalin to do?

These were some of the questions facing the political planners, whose job requires them to think months ahead. If they found the answers, they did not announce them last week; but it was clear already that the long, hard road to peace did not stop at the thirty-eighth parallel.

Three Present Goals

THE Security Council set three goals for the United States and other members of the U. N. in its unprecedented effort to stop aggression. Its resolution of June 25 called for: (1) a cease-fire in Korea; (2) withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and (3) the restoration of peace and security in the area.

Even after the first two goals have been fulfilled, the last will take time, money, manpower and effort—and above all, a plan.

Suppose there is no widening of what the President still calls "a police action" rather than a war; suppose victory in Korea takes six months to win, as former Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson predicted last week that it would.

The two Koreas would still be there—the one, south of the artificial boundary, trying to struggle to its feet again as a democratic republic; the other, north of the line, with its towns and industries wrecked, its army defeated, its leaders in flight, and many of the survivors bent on revenge.

Looking ahead to such a situation—and it is the sound and prudent thing to look ahead—one can foresee a policing job by units of as many U. N. members as possible to make sure that an aggressor does not lunge across the boundary again.

There is little talk or thought at the moment of occupying North Korea, although it would be the normal consequence of a military victory. An occupation north of the line would go beyond the U. N. instructions under which the fight against aggression was undertaken.

But there is serious thought here of the U. N. policing that will be needed, not only along the border but along the coasts, where arms might otherwise be smuggled into the South to start future trouble.

No doubt the policing will be under the direction of the United States as the U. N.'s agent, with MacArthur as the commander, and with a U. N. commission keeping watch on the spot.

It is no wonder that Moscow propaganda has begun calling for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korean soil. For nothing would serve Moscow purposes better than a withdrawal which would permit the aggression to start all over again.

APART from the policing problem, the U. N. will have to consider and reconsider the future government and organization of Korea itself.

The U. N. first set forth its policies toward Korea in a resolution of the General Assembly, adopted by an overwhelming majority on November 14, 1947, when American and Soviet troops were still occupying the two halves of the country.

The resolution recognized "the urgent and rightful claims to independence of the people of Korea." It recalled that "the freedom and independence of the Korean people cannot be correctly or fairly resolved without the participation of representatives of the Korean people."

And it set up a U. N. commission to supervise elections "on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot" as the first step toward setting up a National Assembly of the whole country.

A postscript to the resolution called upon all U. N. members "to refrain from interfering in the affairs of the Korean people" during the interim period, and "thereafter to refrain completely from any and all acts derogatory to the independence and sovereignty of Korea."

Clue to Later Policy

THE subsequent history is familiar. The Soviet Union refused to let the U. N. commission come into North Korea to supervise elections. Free elections were therefore held in the southern half; the Syngman Rhee government was set up under U. N. auspices, and the U. N. later declared it to be the only "lawful" government in Korea.

Now it is worth remebering the 1947 resolution, because it gives a clue to what American and U. N. policy will be after the fighting has ended. The United States still wants a unified Korea, but it wants the people of both halves of the country to have a free choice of their future government, without police-state intimidation to sway their

Geographies Are Kind to Korea

Land of Cherry Blossoms—and Kimchee!

By Orma Tennant Materi
Author of the book, "Irma and the Hermit"

ONCE upon a time (as all good stories begin), Korea was just a name, not a catastrophe.

In 1945, when my husband, Maj. Joseph T. Materi, wrote that he was being sent to Korea, I spread a world map on the floor and, with the aid of Grandma's magnifying glass, started the hunt . . . somewhere around Burma or India, I thought. All I can say is that I was in the right hemisphere.

Finally, in a sixth grade geography, I found the sum total of half a page on Korea. After reading it, I had not only located Korea—a small peninsula south of Manchuria and the USSR—but I had learned that it was a land of dainty butterfly porcelains and charming little brown people.

Not so, dear readers, not so! This Kilroy has been there.

The people are neither little nor brown. They are larger than the Japanese and most Chinese. Their skin is a sort of bronze.

And to discern the subtle scent of cherry blossoms amid the myriad Oriental olfactory sensations takes a superior proboscis. Mine, being the ordinary button-shaped variety, was immediately overpowered by kimchee.

According to the Koreans, kimchee is a food. It is a conglomeration of Chinese cabbage, fish, onions, garlic and red pepper. Maybe that is no worse than some of our American dishes seem to a Korean, but brother, it is a mixture "to lift the top off a foreigner's head!"

Ogled by a Viand

THERE were only two Korean dishes I could never stomach, kimchee and fish baked and served complete with head and tail. There is something about being stared at by the glassy eye of a fish as it lies on a platter that makes one feel not only full but close to overflowing! Everything else I ate in Korea I found delicious. Dried pressed seaweed toasted is quite tasty. Rice I came to delight in when cooked Korean fashion.

Much of the tastiness of their food is due to the use of generous amounts of chestnuts and pine cone nuts.

While enjoying their delicate flavor, I often thought of the patience of the Korean women who could find time from bearing innumerable children, cooking, washing, ironing by beating the cloth with sticks small and round, and waiting on the men of the family to spend hours prying open the pine cones to obtain these delicious nuts.

The above chores are those of the better class wife. Nearer the bottom of the social ladder, the woman also tends the garden, works in the rice paddies, grinds the meal, fetches water, tends the fire, carries on her head whatever burden needs to be transported.

Cultural Pursuits

IN MANY homes, however, Korean women enjoy some of the leisure so much a part of the American way of life. Here are practiced ancient Oriental arts of working with fine silks, flower arrangement, and the composition of classical poetry.

Indeed, many Korean women—like many American women—are now spending every spare moment available in making their community a better place in which to live. For example, I recall one evening entertaining Admiral Sohn Il Wor—now chief of the Korean navy—and his wife. I had made elaborate preparations—a candle-lit table; a tour of the household marvels of American science such as a refrigerator, innerspring mattresses, and bathroom; and homemade movies of life in the good old United States.

The results were a surprise—to me, that is. Instead of being speechless in admiration, the charming Mrs. Sohn—a beautiful and cultured woman by any standards—

Only Place to Turn for European Troops

Re-Arm Germans? We Must Decide Soon

By Don Cook

FRANKFURT, July 15—Driven by the widening military and political repercussions of the Korean war, the Western Allies are quickly being confronted with a decision on the most basic of all German questions—the raising of a West German Army to aid the defense of western Europe.

If the worst should happen and the United Nations forces should be pushed out of Korea, the decision to buttress western European security with German forces might have to be taken very quickly. If the Korean position is held, then the decision is less urgent but no less inevitble.

The "how, when and what" of the German army question is already a preoccupation of the policy makers.

Militarily, the case for a west German army is a simple and obvious one. If western Europe is to be held, it will take ground forces to hold it. The French army is tied up in Indo-China. The British are basically a sea-and-air power with vital ground commitments in the Middle East. The United States is having to commit more and more of its limited infantry strength to the Pacific.

Western Germany is the only place to turn for troops to maintain the military balance that will prevent war between the east and the west.

Committed by Instinct

POLITICALLY, western Germany's ideological place as a member state of the western European community is now clear and unquestioned. Her democratic state of mind leaves a lot to be desired and will undoubtedly cause many uneasy times, but at least Germany can be regarded as committed by instinct and spirit to the west.

The German people are not remotely likely to go Communist and certainly they do not want to be overrun by Communist forces. Yet, across their own border an eventuality, and to expect West Germany army is being built that some day might invade them as South Korea was invaded by North Korea. The Western Powers cannot give any guarantee against such an to stand up to communism without the means of basic protection is too much.

The Korean conflict has forced these lines of basic consideration on the Western Allies at least a full year before any political advisers here would have wished. But as Korea has swept away so many other political and military calculations, it has also knocked to one side the negative case—the instinctive feeling of almost every human being throughout the world five years ago that never again would Germans carry arms.

Political Hazard Involved

THE NEGATIVE case is still a strong one. The thought of Germans again marching is abhorrent. And the knowledge that an enemy of a short time ago may soon be a military ally is repugnant to all, except perhaps the military planners. There is, moreover, the very hazardous political problem of the effect of a new German army on the new German democracy.

The Allied High Commission now is working on the problem of increasing the West German police force to a strength which offers some rallying point of security. But police are not an army and one course which appears to be open lies in utilization of the western European defense planning machinery.

A Possible Solution

THE steps might be these. First, a staff study by the Western Allies to determine a precise and limited role for German troops in the defense of Europe—presumably a border force. Then the calling in of a German military staff to join in further planning.

The Western Allies and the German officers would then jointly prepare a detailed plan of numbers of troops, composition of forces, weapons, equipment and even the final tactical and strategic placement of those German troops. Western Allied officers would be assigned as inspectors of the German forces to make certain that the limits laid down would not be exceeded.

There would be no German general staff, but rather the German staff would remain a part of the Western Allied military staff and would be subject completely to its strategical and tactical decisions and control.

A German force raised in the limited role of taking the shock of invasion from the East Allied Occupation Forces could then be withdrawn to positions of strategic reserve along the Rhine. Such a German border force, in short, would offer some hope of effective western European defense without overbalancing the rest of the military strength of the West.

Integration is the ultimate and probably the only answer to the riddle of controlling German militarism while preserving German and European security. Western Germany appears to be ready for it and if the moment can be seized, a new military role for Germany can open up a great hope for Europe. Defense is the key word and must be the only military role permitted any revived German army.

By the New York Herald-Tribune News Service

The thought of armed Germans marching again is abhorrent to people of nations which suffered from two World Wars brought on by German dictators. Yet Western Germany is the only place for the western allies to turn for troops should the Communists start rolling across Europe. The photo above was taken in 193

Security Versus Information

Wartime News Dilemma Returns

By J. R. Wiggins

KOREAN fighting has been more fully and freely reported than any American military operations since 1898.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur has described the liberty of reporters in the Korean theater as an experiment without precedent in modern combat.

The release of war information through the Defense Establishment has been remarkably free from restriction.

Curtailment of this flow of news, however, now is starting.

This Government, like every war-time government before it, is finding it impossible wholly to reconcile the people's right to know and the armed forces' right to security. To the extent we wish one, we must sacrifice the other. Both these boons cannot be wholly enjoyed in wartime.

War, paradoxically, is the one business of government about which the people wish to know the most and of which they usually are permitted to learn the least.

It diminishes the access of the people to the full information that is the raw material of enlightened public opinion just when government is most desperately in need of both the spur and the check of public opinion.

How much security can we jeopardize in order to keep opinion healthy and intact? How much dare we impair public opinion in order to achieve more complete security? These are questions every war-time government asks. None ever finds an ideal solution. The only practical way out is compromise. Military people generally wish to compromise at the expense of information and opinion; civilian leaders at the risk of security.

The most for which the country can hope is that no decisions be made that do not at least take account of these conflicting requirements.

Authorities Are Uncertain

THE dilemma is somewhat less in case of full-scale war than it is in a "police action" such as that we now fight. Even the staunchest advocates of full and free information, confronted with the terrible risks of full-fledged war, are likely to give way. Sometimes they may give way too far. In crises such as the present, however, even the military authorities are uncertain about both the need for and the efficacy of security measures affecting information.

The problem can be divided into two phases: (1) in the combat area; (2) in the zone of the interior. It can be subdivided, for convenience of discussion, into two classifications in each zone: (1) withholding of information; (2) censorship of information.

Until this week there was little news curtailment (beyond that already in effect) in either of these phases or in any of the four classifications involved.

Combat zone news, as a matter of fact, has been so swift and so complete as to amaze those accustomed to the ordinary restrictions of the zone of operations. Correspondents at the start of World War II were enjoined (by Field Manual 30-26) from releasing information that included:

(1) Identity of organizations in the combat zone (except when announced in communiques).

(2) Names of individuals (except when this accomplished some special purpose).

(3) Direct or indirect quotations from officers (except as specifically authorized by theater commanders).

(4) Identification of a sector in which troops are operating (until the enemy has established this as a fact).

(5) Identification of any town in which American troops are stationed (until established by the enemy).

(6) Names of any base port or communication center having to do with our troop activities.

(7) Ship or rail movements real or possible.

(8) Discussion of plans of the Army, real or possible.

(9) Numbers of troops or classes.

(10) Effect of enemy fire.

(11) Exaggerations of our activities, accomplished or contemplated.

(12) References to casualties (except those based on communiques).

These restraints were applied with varying flexibility and considerable modification in the different combat theaters as the war progressed.

Many Restraints Missing

MANY of these conventional restraints have been missing, so far, in the Korean campaign. News dispatches have identified organizations, given names of many individuals, directly quoted commanders, named sectors and towns and villages occupied by our troops, disclosed bases and communications centers, discussed movements, plans. They have also disclosed troop numbers, elaborated on the effect of enemy fire and dwelt freely on projected and past actions.

There has been a barely perceptible restraint in the past week, but the restrictions so far are a far-cry from the conditions of World War II.

It is too much to expect that this will continue. Every week of the fighting will bring a more conservative policy of withholding news and a tighter policy of censoring news, if past operations are any guide. However different from declared war the Korean crisis may be, diplomatically and domestically, it differs very little in the combat zone. Application of substantially the same policies pursued by field commanders in the last war, are to be anticipated.

What is to happen here is another problem. Pentagon officials have been trying to puzzle it out.

Censorship is not yet in the air. More conservative policies governing the release or the withholding of news are being put into effect. Officials are especially concerned about movements of ships and troops. In the absence of the internal security precautions normal to war, (alien detention, etc.) little probably is to be gained by withholding news of actions already accomplished or movements that have been completed.

Advance announcements of movements and ship departures are another matter. The enemy has a thousand means of discovering what we have done. Unless military authorities tell, they can't find out what we are going to do. They can spy on ship loadings and ship departures, but they can't know their estimated time of arrival or the port where they will land for staging.

The Navy, on Wednesday, announced restrictions on the release of this sort of information.

On Thursday, the Defense Establishment issued a new set of rules governing the release of information about all the United States armed forces and those of other United Nations countries furnishing men or material for the Korean war.

These rules, of course, do not impose censorship on newspapers, who still are free to print what they can get. They do make it more difficult to get at the source of much of the information about our military forces.

Nearest thing to censorship of information already in newspaper hands has been the voluntary consent of reporters to accede to requests of individual commanders in the elimination of information thought to be harmful to the military effort. So far there has not been much of this.

A Perennial Problem

ONLY the nature and the duration of this emergency can forecast how far the curtailment of the free flow of the news will be pursued.

Every American Government since 1860 has struggled with the problem.

In the Civil War, President Lincoln made an appeal for a sort of informal, voluntary censorship. During the war, the Chicago Times was suppressed by military order, until the President rescinded it. The New York Journal of Commerce was temporarily suppressed for printing a forged presidential order, known as "the gloomy" proclamation. A general was ordered to seize the Washington Sunday Chronicle for disclosing troop movements.

The Spanish American War brought few restrictions on the free flow of information. There was no internal censorship. The Signal Corps controlled the cables from Cuba but the newspapers were permitted to get out any dispatches they could send by packet.

Mexican troubles of 1914 brought Navy Department censorship of news out of Vera Cruz but no general application of censorship.

World War I censorship started on March 24, 1917, with the promulgation of a set of regulations by the State, War and Navy Departments when newspapers were asked to adhere on a voluntary basis. On April 14, President Wilson created the Committee on Public Information (headed by George Creel), combining in one agency the functions of information and censorship. Creel himself thought the voluntary censorship he tried to administer was a failure. He advocated, years after the experiment, that the answer was in "secrecy at the source" exercised by the military departments and censorship of outgoing cables and communications.

Censorship Preceded War

WORLD WAR II censorship started in the year prior to the war. On December 31, 1940, Secretary of Navy Frank Knox sent a confidential letter to 5,000 radio, news and picture editors, asking that no mention be made of: (1) Actual or intended movements of United States vessels of aircraft, units of enlisted personnel or of the Marine Corps; (2) secret technical naval weapons; (3) new United States Navy ships or aircraft; (4) Navy construction projects ashore. This request was quite generally complied with except for naval construction estimates read into the Congressional Record and for the New York arrival of the British ship, Malaya.

In September, 1941, War and Navy Departments announced preparations for censorship of outgoing communications.

Declaration of War on December 7, 1941, brought an emergency censorship under J. Edgar Hoover.

On December 16, President Roosevelt released at his press conference a statement on censorship and announced appointment of Byron Price as director of censorship. The President declared that:

(1) It was necessary to withhold some news at its source.

(2) It was necessary to set a watch upon the Nation's borders so no information might reach the enemy.

(3) It is necessary to prohibit domestic publication of some types of information.

(4) The Government was requesting the press and radio "to abstain voluntarily from dissemination of detailed information of certain kinds, such as reports of the movements of vessels and troops."

On December 19, the President formally created the Office of Censorship.

ON JANUARY 15, 1942, the first Code of Wartime Practices for newspapers, magazines and other periodicals was issued and it remained in effect, with periodic revision, throughout the war. Adherence to the code was voluntary, but behind this freely-given cooperation lurked the threat of compulsory censorship as the only alternative.

Operation of voluntary censorship was widely acclaimed as a great war-time success. The explanation is to be found partly in those who administered it and in the principles which guided them. On December 22, 1945, after suspending censorship, (August 15, 1945) Byron Price enumerated some of these principles. He declared that voluntary censorship:

(1) Must deal only with questions involving war security.

(2) Must never request compliance with a request based on questionable security grounds.

(3) Must avoid interference with editorial opinion.

(4) Must never be influenced by nonsecurity considerations of policy or public needs.

(5) Must not request that utterances of public officials be withheld.

(6) Must not withhold any information from the American public which has been generally disseminated abroad.

(7) Must not vouch for truth or accuracy of news stories.

(8) Must not regulate release dates or matters of ethics.

(9) Must be absolutely impartial and consistent.

(10) Must operate openly, advising the public of every request made of the press.

Price 'Bible' Cited

THE "Price Bible," the 150-page report he issued in 1945, may be useful to Government officials much sooner than appeared possible when it was issued. It is to be hoped that it will not be forgotten by any who attempt to make policy in this field.

Few understand the risks and dangers of censorship as Price understood them. He repeatedly warned that it must stick to the job of depriving the enemy of information and collecting intelligence to use against him. And in his final report he warned:

"There are those who believe sincerely, but without counting the ultimate cost, that the censor should operate according to a broader totalitarian philosophy; that he should undertake to suppress criticism of the Government and conceal governmental blunders and delinquencies; that he should make fishing expeditions into private affairs having no possible connection with the war; that he should withhold from the American people, for policy reasons, information known to be available to the enemy. In short, that he should commit in the name of security all of the errors which have helped often enough heretofore to discredit censorships, to divorce their procedures completely from the dictates of common sense, and in the end to weaken greatly their effectiveness.

"Unless and until the day comes when the form of our Government is to be altered materially, it will not be wise or expedient even in times of national peril to undertake thus to reduce American citizens to a state of intellectual slavery. The task of prosecuting the war would be hindered, rather than helped, by any such attempt."

Successful as the censorship was, it had its risks and dangers.

Former President Hoover pointed out some of them in a statement he made in May, 1942. He said:

"Criticism of the conduct of the war is necessary if we are to win the war. We want the war conducted right. The margin between victory and defeat in our foreign campaigns are so narrow that if pressure groups are to take advantage of war to advance their interests, or if we make blunders, or keep incompetent men in office, or allow corruption, bad organization and bad strategy, they can bring about defeat. Democracy can correct mistakes only through public exposure and opposition to them."

Some Bad Effects Noted

WAR-TIME censorship, although wisely operated, had some bad effects on public opinion, and on governmental policy. It can be argued that it helped delay realization of the seriousness of the war crisis, clouded public appreciation of the defense program, put off some emergency measures against U-boat warfare that might have been taken more speedily if a fully informed public had been prodding officialdom, protected some inefficiency that might have been uncovered sooner.

Public officials often have difficulty in distinguishing considerations of security from those of convenience. When they have the power to withhold and suppress news, if their own convenience and reputation is involved (or the convenience or reputation of their friends or superiors) this inability grows.

The frequent exercise of the power of withholding or suppressing information, moreover, diminishes official appreciation of the right of the public to know. In some ways, the imposition of censorship (if it plainly and publicly avowed) is less insidious than the resort to withholding news. This is the tactic of which the public, and even the press, may be least aware. When habitually applied, the policy may have the most serious consequences. Its direct result may be public ignorance of facts essential to public support of the war. Its indirect and more remote result may carry into post-war periods to impair, for decades at a time, the public right of access to information about their own government.

Risks Must Be Weighed

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS begins with the right to get the news. Considerations of national security may inspire the temporary abridgement of that right. Such policies never should be resorted to unless and until the security interest is real. Even then, they must be weighed against the balancing risks of an uninformed public.

So far in the Korean crisis, the American people have had an access to information enjoyed in no previous military operation of this scale. Prudence may dictate some modification of this policy. The outside limits of that modification were set in World War II. If risks have been taken in the past few weeks, because of failure to invoke war-time controls, there are gains to set against these risks.

The American people are fully informed. They have a good understanding of the risks of the Korean venture. They know the dangers involved. They understand the objectives that warrant these risks and dangers. They have had first-hand accounts of our military difficulties that could not fail to prepare a democratic people of high purpose and spirit for sacrifice and exertion. There is no substitute for the psychological preparation achieved through truth, when the truth is what it is in Korea.

This advantage could not have been gained by a more cautious information policy so preoccupied with sound security as to be indifferent to the military advantages of sound public opinion. No temporary military reverses will dismay a democratic people who understand a crisis; in the long run no military successes can save a people who do not understand the challenge that confronts them. If some degree of security has been sacrificed in Korea, the sacrifice has not been wholly in vain.

An Unforgettable Experience

Pilot Recalls First A-Bomb Run

By Steve Lowell

ALBUQUERQUE, July 15 (AP).—Five years ago the first atom bomb rent the lonely silence of a New Mexico desert dawn.

To Bill Hartshorn, the memory of that blast is as fresh as if it were this morning.

Ever since that day he has been tied up in some way with the bomb or whatever develops from it. Right now he is chief pilot for Cargo Air Service of Albuquerque, principally concerned with flying atomic energy bigwigs and other important personages between Albuquerque and Los Alamos, site of one of the Nation's big atomic laboratories.

Bill was the pilot of one of the two B-29s that flew a test run over Trinity, the remote spot where the bomb was born. Maj. Stan Shields of Aberdeen, S. Dak., piloted the other ship.

"We didn't know exactly what to expect," Bill says, recalling July 16, 1944, "but we didn't have to be told that huge mushroom cloud boiling up was what we had been waiting for.

"We had been told about the anticipated size of the explosion," he recalls, "and a little about the radioactive cloud that was expected, but you can understand the suspense."

The plan called for the two planes to drop parachute-suspended pressure gauges near the point of explosion to learn the blast pressure.

Thunderstorms, Too

THE blast was scheduled shortly before dawn. The air crews were to follow a pattern of lights on the ground to maneuver their planes to coincide with the ground schedule.

The forecast was for fair weather. But thundershowers broke a few hours before the planes left Kirtland Air Force Base at Albuquerque. Only fleeting glimpses of the ground could be seen from the planes.

With the help of binoculars, Rear Admiral W. S. Parsons, who was with Shields, was able to keep their plane oriented in the pre-dawn darkness, but making a precision approach was out of the question.

The ground party took over the entire timing problem. Those in the planes, unable to drop their gauges with any degree of accuracy, became observers.

BILL HARTSHORN
. . . one of first to carry A-bomb

A few mihutes before the explosion, Hartshorn's plane was believed to be in an unsafe position. It was released and Bill started back to Albuquerque, but he and the people with him got a ringside view of the blast anyway.

Follow Explosion-Cloud

BILL said the wind soon began merging the bomb cloud with surrounding thunderheads. The planes traced the remnants of the cloud southeast of Albuquerque. But within a few minutes, the cloud was so broken up that the chase was abandoned.

The next day, the press came out with the military's explanation of the mysterious blast. It was attributed to the explosion of an ammunition dump.

Before the cover-up explanations, there were all sorts of guesses. They ranged from earthquakes to ammunition trains blowing up.

The public wasn't alone in its mystification. Even the people working on the project were told only of their particular phase of it and had no conception of the overall program. Authorities questioning workers uncovered some fantastic ideas.

Bill was sitting in a theater at Wendover Air Force Base near Salt Lake City a short time later when he was summoned before another group of officials and asked to fly a secret overseas mission.

A few days later he was back at Kirtland Field. Parts of the bombs were loaded aboard three B-29s, one of them his.

The next morning, they left for Tinian, the Pacific island where the bomb was assembled for Col. Paul Tibbetts to deliver to Hiroshima.

Biggest Oil Pipeline Soon to Be Completed

By Fred J. Zusy

Sidon, Lebanon, July 15 (AP).—Giant steel storage tanks are mushrooming up just south of this ancient Phoenician town to mark the delivery end of a vital strategic oil pipeline.

It is the world's biggest oil pipeline—1067 miles long and 30 to 31 inches in diameter. It cost more than 200 million dollars. Oil will start moving through the line the first of next year. The initial rate is planned at 300,000 barrels a day and the flow later may be increased to 500,000 barrels.

The famous "Big Inch" in the United States when completed in 1943 was 1254 miles long and delivered 300,000 barrels daily through its 24-inch diameter. It now carries natural gas.

The new pipeline will carry crude oil from the rich Saudi-Arabian fields in the Persian Gulf area to tankers anchored a half mile off the Lebanese coast.

The line will save ships a 7000-mile sea voyage around the Arabian Peninsula and through the Suez Canal. It will also save the present 18 cents per barrel canal toll. That's $54,000 a day.

The tremendous engineering enterprise, being built thousands of miles from sources of steel and other supplies, is an all-American show.

Joint Company Control

THE Saudi-Arabian fields are run by the Arabian American Oil Co. (Aramco) owned jointly by Standard Oil of California, Standard Oil (New Jersey), the Texas Co. and Socony Vacuum. Aramco controls Trans-Arabian Pipeline Co. which will operate the pipeline. American firms are laying the pipe and putting up auxiliary construction.

There is no question about the military importance of the new line.

The shortcut bypassing the Suez was talked about during the last world war. The United States Government granted export permits for the 323,000 tons of steel required at a time when steel was very much in demand at home. Military strategy and advice played a big part in this decision, debated before congressional committees.

Some strategists, however, would have vetoed the project. They argued it would be a ripe plum for Soviet picking in event of war. The line, they said, would be impossible to defend.

Construction on the eastern part of the line started in late 1947. The western end was held up by the Palestine war in 1948 and the battle to get steel export permits in Washington.

Syrian Turmoil Delay

POLITICAL turmoil in the Middle East, especially in Syria, also caused some delay. Syria had three coup d'etats last year. The larger part of the line runs through Saudi Arabia. There are small segments in Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Officials have set next January 1 as their target date for completion of the line, its six pumping stations and the terminal tanks near Sidon. Located a mile back from the sea, the tanks are from 280 to 360 feet above sea level, on a range of hills.

The pipeline is well over 50 percent completed. All work has been finished in Lebanon and practically all in Syria. Work starts in Jordan next and in western Saudi Arabia.

The line is of 30 and 31 inches in diameter, the largest ever used for oil movement.

Three lengths are welded together before being carried out along the right-of-way by a fleet of 150 50-ton truck-tractors. Four fifths of the pipe is being buried. For the most part the line runs through a barren country.

Editor Saw War Coming, Was Ignored

Speaking of the Korean war, Majority Leader Lucas told the Senate: "This is a time for action . . . It is amazing how men with hindsight are able to tell what should have been done."

True, this is no time for hindsight. But if we are still to prevent World War III, it is time for foresight. Our best hope for it lies in those who have already proved foresighted.

Sixteen years ago, on Nov. 25, 1934, Clarence Streit—now editor of Freedom & Union—gave a full page of facts and figures in the New York Times.—then its League of Nations correspondent.—proving the Atlantic democracies would be, if they united, strong enough to prevent World War II. He said then:

"United, these . . . western peoples would be self-sufficing, secure, impregnable, irresistible. But they are not united."

"Disunion among a few democracies," he said back in 1934, as he has been saying ever since, is "the real disease to be cured." His advice was ignored.

From Behind Iron Curtain

In 1939 Streit's book, Union Now, showed in detail why alliances and leagues could not succeed in preventing war, and why a federal union of the Atlantic democracies would. It urged the U. S. to assemble the democracies in a Convention to work out a constitution. Years before the atom bomb, Union Now warned:

"If we will not do this little for man's freedom and vast future . . . catastrophe must come."

In its July issue Freedom & Union, which Streit has been editing since 1946, includes a highly enlightening letter smuggled to him from behind the Iron Curtain, from an Hungarian whose hope lies in Atlantic Union now.

"I am reading your book right now," he wrote, "and remember the words in it: 'The outstanding change (since 1913) is that all along the line the catastrophe is developing on a greater scale and at a faster rate, and moving . . . nearer, nearer, nearer to ourselves.' What is the difference between the Hitler danger and the present? It is a difference in scale, to the advantage of the latter."

Atlantic Union Advancing But Not Fast Enough

Since 1939 the idea of Union of the Free has made impressive progress. It is now before Congress in an Atlantic Union resolution calling on the U. S. to invite the other Atlantic Pact sponsors to a Federal Convention to explore how far the free can federate. Senator Kefauver and 80 Senators and Representatives of both parties back it. The Atlantic Union Committee led by former Justice Owen J. Roberts is mobilizing citizens for it. The Canadian Senate overwhelmingly endorsed it June 29.

Union now is marching ahead . . . but is it advancing fast enough to prevent the Korean war from developing into World War III? Let's fool ourselves no longer. We are not winning the peace, but merely time.

In 1947 we faced in Greece a threat that we could check by non-military aid. We used the time gained to start the Marshall Plan. Freedom & Union warned (November 1947) that this was only a stopgap, that we needed Union to gain a decision, instead of a round. Events soon proved it right.

Korea Now—Kansas When?

Next year we faced a worse threat,—a blockade in Berlin that we needed air power to check, but could check without bloodshed. The time gained was used only to make an Atlantic alliance. Again Freedom & Union warned (June, December, 1948, March, April, June, 1949) that we could gain only time with the Atlantic Pact, not a decision.

And now, only two years later, we have slid from threat of war to war itself. At this rate, by 1952 we shall be engaged in world war,—the U. S. a target.

Korea now . . . Kansas when?

Never was foresight more needed.

To prevent World War III you need to do more than keep up with the news. You—yourself—need to keep ahead of the news. You need foresight.

Hershey Got Job as Draft Chief by Accident

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

CURIOUS thing about Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, developer and director of the Selective Service System. He became the father of the draft not through selectivity, but through accident.

In the summer of 1936, Hershey—then an artillery officer—returned to the U. S. A. after serving at Fort Shafter, Hawaii. He anticipated a short tour of duty on the continent, and then another assignment abroad.

It just so happened there was a vacancy at that particular time in the post of secretary to the Joint Army and Navy Selective Service Committee, and it just so happened there was no other assignment available for the artilleryman. Ergo, Hershey was assigned to the then virtually unknown committee.

The artillery officer had six courses in shoeing horses, but—as Hershey later said—none in learning about men. Apparently, this background made the red-headed former Indiana schoolteacher ideally suited for his job. Hershey's temporary continental assignment has now extended over 14 years, with no telling when his mission will be completed.

It was part of the tall Hoosier's nature to meet a challenge with a seemingly tireless energy. By the time Europe had become enmeshed in World War II and the United States became concerned enough about the situation to adopt the Selective Service Act of 1940, Hershey was recognized as the authority on the subject. He was assigned to a deputy post in the civilian-controlled Selective Service System, but by the summer of 1941. Hershey was running the show in title as well as in fact.

Cryptic in Prophecy

JUST about this time—that attack on Pearl Harbor was still six months off—Hershey was asked how long the drafted men would have to serve. "I'm no prophet," responded the Indianan in typical epigrammatical fashion. "I couldn't tell for sure if it would rain, but if I was a farmer, and it looked like this, I'd get my hay in."

More than 10 million men were inducted into the military services during World War II via the draft. General Hershey carried out this mass operation with an army of 27,000 paid workers and 185,000 volunteers.

An ardent believer in decentralization, Hershey felt that the 6600 local boards and 265 appeals boards, made up of neighbors of the selectees, were in the best position to decide which one should bear arms and which one should work on the home front. He believes that the way things worked out justified his point of view.

In the rush to demobilize our men after World War II, Hershey maintained his characteristic calm and wit. During a wrangle with a Senate subcommittee demanding that more inductees be rushed overseas to get the veterans home, a Senator roared at the draft director: "General, you're in the saddle!"

"I'm in the saddle," responded Hershey, "but I've lost my stirrups."

After the war, General Hershey plugged hard, but to no avail, for universal peacetime military training as the best kind of insurance to preserve "our national existence." He said the country could no longer afford—in the atomic era—to risk being drawn into conflicts unprepared.

Draft Act Expires

DESPITE Hershey's efforts, President and Congress permitted the draft act to expire in the spring of 1947. Hershey was named head of the Office of Selective Service Records charged with liquidating the Selective Service System, with maintaining some 50 million records, and with preserving the draft know-how.

A year later, however, President Truman asked for both Selective Service and universal military training. Congress responded with a limited draft, but rejected the second proposition. Hershey was renamed director of Selective Service. This new draft produced 30,000 inductees, stimulated many more enlistments. The last group was called up in January, 1949.

An economy-minded Congress then cut Selective Service's budget in half and drastically reduced its activity. Hershey shrugged, and with a skeleton staff kept working on plans for the day he might have to put them to use. When the call came last week for 20,000 draftees, the 57-year-old Hoosier's plans were ready to be put into action.

Lewis Blaine Hershey was born on a farm in Steuben County, Ind. He became a rural teacher after getting out of high school, later continued schooling and earned three degrees at Tri-State College. Meanwhile, he participated in the Mexican border war with the National Guard, elected as second lieutenant by his company. He stayed on for World War I, was an artillery officer in France, and on returning to the States decided to stay in the Army. He was moving along the routine path of military learning and promotion when chance plopped him into Selective Service.

In 1917 Hershey married Ellen Dygert, his hometown sweetheart. They have two sons, two daughters, and six grandchildren.

It's been almost 15 years since General Hershey first began planning and developing Selective Service. He's older now—as testified to by the gray-white hair replacing his shock of reddish-brown. But there's been no change in his philosophical wit, in his bursting energy, or in his bulging briefcase. Somehow, the general has never been able to catch up with his homework.

Geographies Are Very Kind to Korea

could hardly wait to tell me in excellent English about her work in teaching a class of eager young Koreans about American democracy.

When you get to know them, the Koreans lose some of their Oriental inscrutability and reveal the warmhearted qualities that have long ago won them the nickname of the "Irish of the Orient." For example, because of their impulsive generosity and hospitality, it is definitely dangerous to admire any valuable article belonging to a Korean.

One evening while strolling through the garden of a sumptuous Korean home, I thoughtlessly expressed my admiration for a stone statue that must have weighed many hundred pounds. Next day there appeared at my door several men plus cart plus statue. "Presento." To the Korean, the refusal of a gift is an insult, and the only way I could persuade our Korean friend to take back the statue was to explain that I wanted his gift very much but that the American Military Government forbade Americans to accept gifts from Koreans. "Were it not for that," I said, "I would take it home and place it in my garden to stand forever as a warm reminder of your friendship and generosity and the clasped hands of Korea and America." Thus mollified, Mr. Kim sent his men to retrieve half a ton of marble.

Authentic Politeness

GLIBNESS with flowery language is an art that Americans soon acquire, since the excessive politeness of the Korean makes a blunt American feel downright rude, crude and uncivilized. You are thinking, perhaps, of the bowing and scraping of the Japanese and questioning its sincerity? That I cannot tell you, but that the very great majority of Koreans are sincere I will stake my life.

The Korean does not accept domination and exploitation with the patient resignation of the Chinese. He is a fighter and a good one. If you are now thinking of how some of the South Korean soldiers threw up their arms and fled before Red tanks, remember we gave the South Koreans no tanks and no opportunity to become familar with them. All men, whatever the color of their skin, are frightened by the unknown, the strange.

Among the less important results of our occupation of Korea was their adoption of many of our customs. Western dress is seen quite frequently, particularly among the younger generation. In one way, this is unfortunate, because the Korean native dress is attractive, colorful, graceful, and, most of all, it hides the national deformity—bowlegs. These are caused by the practice of carrying children on the mother's back with the child's legs spread one on either side of the mother's waist.

Our occupation also introduced several new words into the Korean language. The most important is "democracy." The next most important—to Americans at least—is "privacy."

When you consider that many hospitable Koreans, their houses crowded by the flood of five million refugees fleeing the Communist rule, are living 12 to 20 per habitation, it is understandable that privacy is something not easily attainable.

Since my son and I arrived in Korea in the first shipload of dependents, we had to introduce this revolutionary idea. There were no locks on the bathroom door and the bedroom had only sliding partitions. After many unsuccessful attempts by my husband to explain to the Korean servants that they must knock and await permission to enter, he called upon his interpreter at the National Police College for assistance.

Mr. Lee was baffled, explaining that there was no such expression in the Korean language, but after some thought he prepared a sign to be hung on the bathroom door. Some time later we asked a Korean friend to translate this sign which had accomplished such wonders. "Secret Room," it said.

Saga of 'Pecan Soup'

THE difficulties of language are a constant source of amusement to both Koreans and Americans. Almost every Korean under 65, at the time we lived there, was seriously studying English many hours a day and losing no opportunity to practice reading or writing with an American.

This brings to mind the houseboy we called Pecan Soup, and his letter of resignation. Letters of resignation were one thing we had plenty of. One cause of our high mortality rate in houseboys was the operation of pouring fuel oil from 5-gallon cans into the 55-gallon drum supplying the house heater.

To obtain gravity, this drum was mounted on a stand 5 feet off the ground. This necessitated standing on top of the drum, which became slippery from frost and spilled fuel oil. Although my husband instructed each successive houseboy time and again in the proper precautions to be observed, invariably would come the day when I would hear a loud crash, and down would come houseboy, oil can and all.

Pecan Soup's inevitable accident occurred while Joe and I were absent, and this letter arrived after our return.

Feb' 19 in 47

Dear Aunt
Excuse me
last Thursday when I have engaged falling the oil into the stove, unfortunately fell down from steps. So I have been attacked in my side breast by oilcan. Then yesterday I called on some Korean Dr. and he ordered me to "keeping the Body comfortably" So that I must get the rest for about two weeks. knowing that you could not be without servant like me, I think you must employe new one. And would you kindly to write the letter of introduction to Somebody who need servant for after two weeks When I may be Healthy condition again.

Trying Vandenberg's Shoes for Size

By Robert Albright
Post Reporter

A LIVELY competition to fill the bipartisan foreign policy gap left by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg's illness has developed in the Senate.

The closed ranks policy, following the United States stand in Korea, enabled half a dozen forward-looking Republicans to step out with "contributions" to the bipartisan course.

A year ago Vandenberg's voice would have been heard above all of them. When his recovery is complete, he may still point the GOP way. But during his convalescence there is no gainsaying a vacuum exists. That other voices are rising to the crisis is a tribute to his own party's cleavage with the isolation of the past.

The "contest" to fill his place may not be a conscious one but at least it represents a GOP groping to clarify, enunciate and even dramatize as he did an unpartisan course.

Since Congress and often the Administration itself must clear through committees, it is in the Senate Foreign Affairs circle that Vandenberg's absence is chiefly felt.

Quest Goes on

IN point of seniority his normal successor would be Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.), the next ranking member. Wiley has responded by quiet cooperation with our present Far Eastern course.

He has not aspired to be nor succeeded in being another Vandenberg, however, and besides he is in the midst of a re-election campaign.

The man who most nearly reflects Vandenberg's own views and has backstopped him most effectively in the past is probably Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, jr. (R., Mass.). But Lodge holds the junior minority post on the committee, and is handicapped by the Senate's traditional seniority fetish.

In between, Senator H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), who ranks next to Wiley, has recently taken the lead in trying to get genuine Republican "participation" in the formulation of foreign policy.

With John Foster Dulles as State Department interlocutor, Smith opened last week a round of conferences with the Senate's full Republican membership. This is probably the most ambitious bipartisan effort to date. Even if it fails, it should make for a better party comprehension of world problems.

But Smith, like Lodge and Wiley, doesn't pretend to be another Vandenberg, and the quest for a successor goes on.

The contest, if you can call it that, has spread beyond the Foreign Relations Committee to GOP nonmembers having a keen interest in world affairs.

Other Bipartisans

MOST frequently contacted by the Administration in the recent foreign affairs crisis has been Senator Styles Bridges (R., N. H.), ranking minority member of the Armed Service Committee and second only to Vandenberg in GOP Senate service.

Unlike many of his GOP contemporaries, Bridges never went off the isolationist deep end but was one of the sharpest critics of pre-Korean war policies in the Far East.

In the present emergency, however, he has backed the Administration to the hilt. He is the only Republican who has sat in on all four of the recent White House bipartisan conferences.

Other Senate Republicans who have recently come forward with bi-partisan "contributions" of their own include:

Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.). He recently urged the President to create a "national unity" government by taking Republicans into his Cabinet.

Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), Vandenberg's Michigan colleague. His most recent proposal: That the United Nations brand any country that aids the North Korean Reds as guilty of "acts of war."

Senator Ralph E. Flanders (R., Vt.). He sensed a cold war showdown sooner than most and plugged once a week for a "Voice" program piercing the Iron Curtain.

The North Koreans struck while Vandenberg was suffering a double loss—impairment of his health and the death of his wife. The times haven't yet passed him by nor has any one individual Senator yet stepped into his shoes.

But in place of the Michigander's once dominant leadership of his party in world affairs there is developing a composite responsibility. Something good can come from that.

Silent Sleuthing

RHYME, what crimes are committed in thy name?

Crime reporters who flew to Miami last week with the Kefauver crime committee have their own marching song.

Entitled "Fosdick's Fearless Five," it's dedicated to so-called "Silent Sleuthing."

Shouted to the strains of the Notre Dame march, the opening lines run something like this:

Cheer, cheer, for our fearless five,
They'll get the hoodlums—dead or alive,
Silent sleuthing's bound to win,
Up with the law and down with sin.
Gambling, narcoticsm, white slavery, too.
They'll tell the nation who-sells-to-who . . .

There's more to it but the rest warrants criminal action.

77 in Reserves

MEMBERS of Congress holding Reserve officer commissions are trying to decide what to do in case the Reserves are called up on more than the present selective basis.

SEN. SMITH — SEN. LODGE — SEN. FLANDERS

SEN. KNOWLAND — SEN. WILEY — SEN. FERGUSON

Legislators faced the same dilemma at the outbreak of World War II. Several tried to serve while retaining their House and Senate seats but Franklin Roosevelt put an end to that. He ruled they had to resign from Congress first.

In the end only two members actually resigned to go into the armed forces—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge (R., Mass.) and Representative James E. Van Zandt (R., Pa.).

Roughly 7 Senators and 70 House members are now Reserve officers in various branches of the service. Some already have been put on the spot by Navy letters inquiring about the willingness of their Reservists to serve.

Actually the Navy never has been particularly anxious for "sea lawyers." Nor have other branches of the service encouraged Congressmen to volunteer. It invariably leaves a commanding officer in an awkward spot.

Pretty soon the Administration is expected to clarify policy on the point, as it did after Pearl Harbor. Legislators are exempt from conscription, but could still volunteer. Even their voluntary service may be discouraged, in a nice way.

If Harry Truman follows Roosevelt's precedent, he will tell them they are more valuable in Congress than they would be in uniform.

Thomas' Bad Break

THE KOREAN war issue is getting its first real work-out in a political campaign—Oklahoma's run-off Democratic primary for the United States Senate.

Representative Mike Monroney is hammering Senator Elmer Thomas, chairman of the Senate Military Appropriations subcommittee, for failing to provide adequately for the present war emergency.

Thomas, who trailed Monroney in the original primary, was sufficiently worried to make a trip back to Washington last week to press for additional appropriations.

Then he flew back to Oklahoma with a letter from Defense Secretary Louis Johnson saying defense funds were "adequate" through July 31.

Johnson added, however, that the department will have to spend at a faster rate than Congress allowed for after that date.

Thomas flew into a bad break in Washington. He arrived here just before the President received ranking members for the Appropriations Committee. Thomas' name wasn't on the guest list.

Scant Comfort

THE Administration gleaned no crumb of comfort from Tuesday's South Carolina primary elections, even though Dixiecrat leader Strom Thurmond was defeated for the Senate.

To win, Senator Olin Johnston had to paste Truman as hard if not harder than Thurmond.

Even Representative Hugo S. Sims, jr., viewed as an up and coming Southern liberal in the House, turned on the Administration in the freakish campaign.

"A Vote for Sims Endorses His Fight Against Truman," read Sims' campaign literature. "To Fight Truman, Says Sims, One Must Be on the Firing Line."

Sims hasn't yet been elected. His anti-Fair Deal opponent forced him into a run-off.

One bleak fact haunts the Administration. Even those candidates who campaigned as regular Democrats, against Dixiecrats, had to use Dixiecrat tactics to win.

Road to Korean Peace decision.

It is a safe guess, then, that the U. N. will again seek a unified Korea on this basis when the war is over. There is no prospect that the Soviet Union would agree to such unification, unless it executes one of the tactical retreats for which Russian diplomacy is famous. After all, the Russians permitted free elections in Czechoslovakia after the war, confident that the Communists would be able to take over by infiltration and treachery, as they finally did 2½ years ago.

North Korean propaganda is shouting the slogans of unification even today, while the war is going on. The Communist Premier, Kim Il Sung, broadcast an appeal last week to his "dear countrymen" of the South, and has been posing as the patriotic chief of a united country. American spokesmen may well counter this appeal before long by reminding the Korean people that the United Nations offers them unification and freedom too.

A Slender Thread

BEFORE the fighting is over, the United Nations probably will have to face a third decision, far broader in scope than the policing and the postwar administration of Korea. This one involves the future of the United Nations itself.

The governments that combined so swiftly, and so effectively in the Korean crisis will have to find some way of taking equally swift and stern action in the event of some future aggression.

The Security Council was able to act as it did in the Korean case largely because the Soviet delegate stayed away from its meetings.

Looking back on those historic sessions last month, officials here shiver to think of what would have happened if the Soviet delegate had been there to cast a veto, or if he had started the familiar procedural wrangles to delay action.

In such an event the Americans were ready to ask for the summoning of a special session of the General Assembly, and they could have had one within three days. But the U. N. would have exhibited its impotence to the world, and the independent republic of South Korea probably would have been extinguished for good unless the United States had acted on its own.

One four-letter Russian word, "nyet," meaning "no," was all that stood between action and frustration at that time. On June 27, just before the meeting that voted to take military action, Trygve Lie, the secretary-general, lunched at the house of Konstantin Zinchenko, the Russian who is assistant secretary-general in charge of security matters.

Jacob A. Malik, the Soviet delegate was there; so was Ambassador Ernest A. Gross, the American deputy representative. According to one who was present, Lie excused himself as soon as the meal was over, and explained that he had to hurry off to the Security Council meeting.

He turned to Malik with a smile and asked him, "Won't you come to the meeting with me?" Malik's answer was the usual "nyet." On such slender threads does history depend.

Soviet diplomacy is so rigid that its emissaries seldom do anything on the spur of the moment. The Soviet policy of boycott had been set, and there probably was no real danger that Malik would have accepted Lie's half-bantering invitation.

Still, if the Kremlin had been as shrewd as it is sometimes imagined, it could easily have thwarted the most damaging blow the U. N. ever struck at Soviet policy.

Continuing Authority

AMBASSADOR Philip C. Jessup said at Charlottesville last week that the U. N. had come into its own as a "functioning instrument of collective security."

But obviously the U. N. cannot survive as such an instrument if every action against aggression has to depend upon Soviet absence from its meetings.

Thoughtful officials here are convinced by now that something has to be done to circumvent not only the Soviet veto, but also the danger of Soviet delaying tactics, when some future aggressor is on the march across a frontier.

Something has to be put onto the U. N.'s statute books which would give continuing authority to the United States and other willing countries to act quickly against aggression in case the Security Council fails to do so.

Article 51 of the Charter already authorizes "individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security."

But this does not give the United States and other members the advantage of being able to act with the authority of United Nations instructions or recommendations. The question, therefore, is what kind of resolution might be devised?

A Blank Check?

THE obvious instrument is the General Assembly, where the non-Soviet states have an overwhelming majority and where the Soviet Union does not have a veto. A resolution of the General Assembly is only a recommendation, but past resolutions have been effective enough to station U. N. commissions in Greece and Korea, and to do many other things which have helped to keep the peace.

There is always a danger that a standing resolution might serve as a blank check to be used against aggression before the fact of aggression has been formally determined. The planners here are well aware of the danger, but they are aware, too, that the whole intent and spirit of the charter is to prevent armed aggression across national frontiers.

When the assembly meets in September there is sure to be a full-dress debate on Korea, if only to give the smaller nations a chance to declare themselves. In the meantime the most practical course may be to ask the so-called Little Assembly, the standing committee of assembly members, to study the possibility of a resolution on aggression.

One of the purposes of the Little Assembly is to study issues that may be placed later before the assembly itself. The Russians and their followers have chosen to boycott the Little Assembly and regard it as an illegal body.

So, for the second time, a Soviet boycott may enable the U. N. to do what most of its founders really intended.

District Defense

The Korean conflict has heightened interest in civil defense, and in this seat of Government (a possible early target for attack in any general war) this interest ought to be especially great. The House authorization of $290,000 to begin civil defense preparations here is a much needed boost to advance the program beyond the talk stage. There is no reason for such preparation to be hysterical unless the planners totally lose sight of the objective.

That objective should be to provide a workable emergency plan and a small corps of trained citizens who would know what to do should attack occur. It is perhaps easier at this stage to describe what civil defense is not than to define precisely what it should be. First of all, it has nothing to do with military defense of the District; it is concerned with what District officials and citizens can do to gird themselves against attack and recoup if one should happen. It should scrupulously avoid such ostentations as "morale-building," drilling with tin hats and the abortive junior G-men's corps which Major Barrett proposed some 18 months ago.

What civil defense can achieve is quiet planning, for example, as to how the District could protect its water supply against sabotage or contamination; how communications could be maintained; how emergency electrical and other utility service could be provided; how large numbers of casualties could be cared for. The last point is particularly important and, in respect of possible atomic attack, requires schooling in radiological medicine. In this connection the District Medical Society has been far ahead of the Commissioners in pushing for measures now.

Beyond this, effective civil defense will necessitate the training of cadres of qualified citizens who in turn can train others. On this point calmness and restraint are the key to the success of the program—along with adequate information so that the public can understand what is being done. Nothing could be worse than for self-appointed commissars to begin pushing other people around.

Security Dismissals

The power summarily to fire any employe on security grounds, which would be conferred on the heads of 11 Federal agencies under the terms of a bill overwhelmingly adopted by the House last week, seems to us needless and mischievous. In effect, it would deprive employes of those agencies of such protection of tenure as the Civil Service laws afford them; and it would deeply undermine the loyalty program. The impact on the morale of the million Government workers involved would impair rather than promote national security.

The purpose of the bill is to facilitate the discharge of employes who are deemed undesirable—and therefore, in a sense, hazardous to national security—but who cannot fairly be judged disloyal within the terms of the executive order establishing the loyalty program. Some are said to be indiscreet in their conversations or associations, some are suspected of drinking excessively or being heavily in debt. It is true, of course, that such persons might, under certain circumstances, injure national security. But to discharge them as security risks would be to stigmatize them in a way that might make it impossible for them to gain a livelihood anywhere, in or out of the Government. They might much more fairly and accurately be called "unsuitables" or "undesirables."

The terms of the 1912 Civil Service Act do not foreclose dismissal of such persons when there are real and demonstrable reasons to justify dismissal. An administrator has authority under the act to fire any employe for cause; he is required only to give the employe a written statement of the charges against him and an opportunity to reply in writing—at least so far as nonveterans are concerned. The procedure in the case of an employe having status as a veteran is much more complicated and doubtless ought to be modified—particularly since nearly half of the Government's personnel now have such status. But in no case should employes be deprived of the procedural safeguards necessary to protect them from error and prejudice. A specific statement of charges in connection with any dismissal is a minimum protection against political discrimination, personal favoritism and capriciousness. And when a dismissal involves stigmatization as a security risk, it ought to be made only after an appropriate hearing within the agency, with the right of review by some impartial tribunal outside it.

The extension of the security risk system, as contemplated in the bill passed by the House, to departments such as Commerce and Justice, which are not predominantly sensitive agencies in security terms, could not fail to undermine the loyalty program. Its effect might be to set aside Loyalty Review Board clearances whenever the head of an agency should entertain any suspicion about an employe, however unsubstantiated—or whenever a member of Congress should choose to point an accusatory finger. Good administration no less than justice to individual employes requires that anyone whose trustworthiness is impugned be given a chance to defend himself before being thrown out of his job and disgraced. And good administration is an element of national security too important to be quixotically ignored.

Scare Buying

It was a foregone conclusion that the Korean campaign would, in the absence of controls, lead to increases in the prices of some commodities in comparatively short supply. Indeed, price increases resulting from an imbalance between effective demand and existing supplies serve the useful purpose of putting pressure on consumers to reduce their buying demands. Under normal conditions the free-pricing system is, for that reason, a social mechanism that can safely be depended on to stimulate or reduce buying, and bring about a reasonably equitable distribution of goods and services. When the country is involved in war or faced by threats of war, however, the system of free pricing is subjected to a severe test. Government demands, actual and prospective, give rise to fears of shortages to come and are likely to lead to scare buying by consumers and inventory hoarding by manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. That kind of buying creates artificial scarcities and helps to bring about the price increases that buyers fear.

As The Washington Post said two weeks ago, "The surest way to fasten rigid controls on the economy would be to yield to the tempation to hoard goods in disregard of the effect on national security." Since that warning was uttered prices of cotton, wool, grain, livestock, nonferrous metals and other sensitive commodities have been rising rapidly. The rise in wholesale prices has not been confined to scarce commodities, for the country has superabundant stores of cotton and grain. We are forced to conclude, therefore, that the price system has been thrown out of gear as a result of the war scare. Since these price increases will no doubt be followed by increases in the retail cost of food and clothing, there is grave danger that the public, which has already begun to indulge in hoarding on a limited scale, will embark on buying sprees necessitating imposition of price controls.

If the Korean conflict can be localized, voluntary controls over prices and allocations of strategic materials ought to be sufficient to meet the Government's needs for materials and supplies, provided the public refrains from panic buying and businessmen do not take advantage of opportunities to profit at public expense. Local bankers are said to be discouraging any unusual extension of credit for the purpose of building up inventories, and are emphasizing the importance of keeping business on as normal a basis as possible. If consumers, producers and distributors follow that sensible advice, it should not be necessary to resort to price controls and rationing. Should the upward price trend continue, however, the Government will be forced to intervene very soon to prevent a rise in living costs that would lead to another round of wage increases and strikes to enforce wage demands.

Jury's Choice

A delicate and interesting question respecting the admissibility as evidence of what are called "uncommunicated threats" was decided this week by the United States Court of Appeals for the District. The case involved a murder in which the defendant pleaded self-defense. His testimony that he had been threatened by his victim was refuted by several eye-witnesses of the crime, and he was convicted of murder in the first degree in March, 1947. Subsequently, however, the defendant's attorneys learned what the prosecution had known at the time of the trial, that a morgue attendant had said he found an open penknife in the deceased's pocket. Judges Edgerton and Proctor agreed that the convicted man is entitled to a new trial.

Judge Clark dissented vehemently, arguing that the evidence of the open penknife was irrelevant because, being unknown to the defendant, it could not have afforded any justification for "self-defense." The defendant, he said, "is a bloody-handed murderer who has too long defeated the ends of justice." Judge Clark is probably quite right in this judgment; and we agree with him that the "uncommunicated threat" affords little support to the defendant's plea. But it seems to us that this is peculiarly a matter for the jury to weigh in the context of other evidence available to it.

At the very least the information about the penknife should have been available to the defendant's lawyers to make such use of as the trial judge deemed proper. The prosecution withheld the information from the defense in the belief that it was inadmissible as evidence; and the Court of Appeals expressed confidence in the good faith of this action. It added an admonition, however, which ought never to be forgotten by any United States Attorney: "When there is substantial room for doubt, the prosecution is not to decide for the court what is admissible or for the defense what is useful." A man on trial for his life is entitled to every reasonable opportunity to prove his case.

Propaganda Trick

One of the most effective strokes of propaganda in the Korean war up to now has been scored by the enemy with some assistance from the American press. The newspapers have carried several items about radio programs broadcast by the Communists at Pyongyang. In one of these programs a voice identified as that of Capt. Ambrose Nugent denounced the American intervention as part of a Wall Street plot against all the peace-and-freedom-loving peoples of the earth. Some days earlier Captain Nugent, who had been attached to the unhappy Twenty-fourth Infantry Division, had been reported missing in action.

This item of news appears to have originated in Tokyo. But the actual transcript of the broadcast as recorded by monitors in the United States shows that it was not even pretended that Captain Nugent was speaking. The announcer merely read a statement purported to have been made by him. In another broadcast from Seoul statements, all couched in the same party-line stereotypes, and reading like so many speeches by Mr. Paul Robeson, or so many recent editorials from the New York Daily Worker, were attributed to other captured American officers, who were, however, not identified. Here are some examples:

> As I see things, I cannot but regret that as a servant of the Wall Street merchants I have participated in a war which disturbs the unification and freedom of the peaceful Korean people . . . As I see the Koreans fighting for the freedom and independence of the fatherland, I feel that America should take her hands off Korea as soon as she can. [Attributed to Captain Nugent.]
> . . . I know that the American Government is joining in the Korean civil war against the Korean people in support of Syngman Rhee's puppet government, and the Americans are obstructing peaceful unification . . . They are bombing the peaceful people, sisters, mothers and fathers, living in villages and towns. I know that Americans are invading not only Korea but China . . . The best way [is] for us Americans to withdraw our armed forces from Korea. [Attributed to a captured infantry officer.]

One captured American is quoted as having accused President Truman of dreaming of world domination. Tass also quotes a statement supposedly made by 114 American prisoners as drawing these conclusions:

> The Koreans have suffered for many years from foreign interference. The Koreans themselves must solve Korean domestic problems. We have understood clearly that the American Government is carrying out armed intervention in Korea and we are firmly convinced that the Korean question will be solved by the Koreans themselves.

Of course, it is possible that by torture or by other means American soldiers were forced by their captors to sign such statements. But even of this there is as yet no evidence whatever. A more reasonable surmise is that the Communists having got hold of the names of captured Americans made use of them. As a matter of justice, these stories should be scrutinized rather carefully before they are rushed into print.

No Blank-Check Powers

President Truman is said to be preparing to report to Congress and the Nation early this week on the fighting in Korea and its repercussions in this country. There has been a good deal of impatience in Congress over the delay of such a report, but the danger of snap judgment in the White House on matters of such gravity is readily apparent. Not until yesterday did Generals Collins and Vandenberg, Army and Air Force chiefs of staff, return from the Far East presumably with estimates of what will be needed to repel the aggressors in Korea. Only when these basic estimates have been reviewed will it be possible to judge what will be necessary in the way of controls over our domestic economy. In our opinion, the President has been well advised not to rush to Congress prematurely with proposals that might prove wholly unwarranted.

As soon as the situation is clarified, we think the President should make a direct request for whatever legislation appears to be needed. The talk about an appeal for stand-by powers has met a chilly reception on Capitol Hill, and for good reason. Congress will doubtless remain in session long enough to enact any required emergency legislation. That is its responsibility. There can be no doubt that it will approve any step essential to follow through on the policy that has been initiated in Korea, but congressional leaders in both parties are apparently determined to do the legislating themselves, instead of authorizing the President by the blank-check method to place the national economy under controls at his discretion.

This is a healthy sign. The American system does not require the abandonment of representative government to meet an emergency. We have a "fighting Constitution," but it is based on the assumption that all branches of the Government will do their duty in time of war or other national peril and not upon the idea of relinquishing all power into the hands of a single individual or executive group.

HEAT

Green apples hide their wintry cores,
And glass holds icicles of light,
Though over summer valleys pours
The smoking mocha of the night.

Curtains and walls and human flesh
Surrender to the pushless stream;
Faces are leaves no longer fresh,
Hands have a hot and idle gleam.

There is no coolness on the grass,
But in the bay the sand is cold;
White dishes keep their chilly gloss,
And ironed sheets their snowy fold.

Need For The Schuman Plan

By Andre Visson

Stronger Europe

PUBLIC opinion in this country has for the last three weeks been focused on Korea. Communiques from the Korean front have pushed back news from other parts of the world. Without doubt, the developments in Korea are very serious. Liquidation of the Korean aggression is now expected to be a lengthy and costly operation. And many other unpleasant developments may occur during this period. There are a number of potential Koreas in the world today and it is a time for vigilance.

But the Soviets would indeed score a major victory if our military effort in Korea and our vigilance in other areas should make us forget our main objective—the building of a strong Western world community. Only such a community would be able to prevent the outbreak of a third world war.

Thus the fighting in Korea should not divert us from the urgency of implementing the commitments of the North Atlantic Treaty. Every member nation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has undertaken to contribute to the collective security of the area covered by the treaty. One of the Soviet objectives in launching the Communist aggression in Korea was unquetionably the desire to have us slow down our military assistance program for Europe.

HERE Moscow miscalculated. American policy makers are determined to fulfill all American commitments to the signatories of the North Atlantic Treaty. And they likewise expect the European countries to fulfill their commitments. If European nations want us to come to their defense, they must do their part by furnishing all the forces they can muster for the defense of their countries.

But in a modern war military power is conditioned by economic strength. That is why the Schuman Plan for pooling the French and German coal and steel industries is now acquiring a new importance. Some extreme British Laborites, such as John Strachey, may suspect the Schuman Plan of being a continental plot to block further socialization of the European key industries. But the real objective of the Schuman Plan is to lay the economic foundation for a federation of Europe in which Germany would find her rightful place and cease to be a threat to her neighbors. And the immediate objective of the Schuman proposal is to strengthen the economy of continental Europe, which is the source of its military power.

A study of the working paper prepared by the French experts for the delegations of the six European countries discussing the drafting of the treaty on the Schuman proposal, reveals how much thought the French have given the Schuman Plan and how determined they are to make it a success, despite all the obstacles which will have to be overcome.

The essential point of the Schuman Plan is the creation of common, supranational institutions. The supranational high authority which would be the executive and administrative body for the western European coal and steel industries would be responsible to the common assembly elected directly by the parliaments of the member countries. (Incidentally, the French experts suggest that iron ore, pig iron and scrap iron should be included in the term "steel.")

THE MEMBERS of the high authority would be appointed by the participating governments, but acting in common. That means that no member could be appointed by a participating country without the prior approval by the other countries. The high authority would be responsible to the citizens of the member countries through the creation of a common assembly. This assembly, composed of delegates to be elected each year by the parliaments of the member countries, would meet once a year to debate publicly the report of the high assembly. Should the common assembly pass a motion of censure by a two thirds majority, the members of the high assembly would have to resign. Thus, for the first time, an international assembly would be more than an advisory body.

On the other hand, the member countries and their industrial organizations administered by the high authority would have the right of appeal against decisions which in their opinion would jeopardize their economic expansion or the external balance of payments. And the court of arbitration could request the high authority to modify its decision.

The two main objectives of the high authority would be the creation of a broad single market and the modernization of production capacity.

The French working paper makes various suggestions for the protection of the workers in the pooled industries as well as of the consumers. The advisory committee of the consumers would see to it that all cartel practices were abolished.

The acceptance of the French proposal would be Europe's most valuable contribution to the collective security of the North Atlantic community.

"Gnyets"

I submit the following proposed draft of a suitable reply to the Russian charge that the United States has been using aircraft to spread potato bugs in East Germany.

"The Government of the United States notes with chagrin that the excellent intelligence service of the government of the USSR has succeeded in discovering indubitable evidence of the nefarious action by the United States Government in causing the dissemination by United States aircraft of insects charged with mission of destroying the potato crops which otherwise might have been harvested from farmlands under USSR control. The Government of the United States regretfully admits that the said insects are those produced in quantity by its puppet government of Japan and are known as Japanese beetles, not potato bugs.

"The Government of the United States reluctantly must indicate that it's censorious course of action was undertaken only as a more humanitarian measure in retaliation for the militarily terroristic course pursued recently by the USSR, in causing guided missles of USSR origin to disseminate insects locally termed 'gnyets' (sometimes pronounced 'gnyats', or 'gnuts' over the grounds occupied by the Army-Navy Country Club in Arlington County, adjacent to Washington, one of the results of which has been the engendering of severe psychoneuroses among highest level officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Air Force, whose earnest efforts to approach par are being nullified by the deplorable condition of the putting greens, caused by the depredations of said gnyets.

"With assurances, etc."

Danger In Germany

Dedicated to prevent a third world war, the Society for the Prevention of World War III supports the efforts of the United States to halt the Korean conflict and all steps taken by President Truman, in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council. Having pledged the support of the free people of the world against totalitarian aggression, the United States had to act accordingly. Unless the Charter of the United Nations is upheld, man's hope for a world of law, order and security will be shattered.

While attention is presently concentrated on the Far East, the society nevertheless wants to make it clear that Germany still remains danger spot No. 1. The cue given in a statement of the official Soviet newspaper, Red Fleet, according to which "the German people understand as never before that (its) fundamental and vital interests can be safeguarded only as the result of restoration of the unity of Germany, liberating the country from the Anglo-American imperialists" speaks for itself. It is obvious that, in the months to come, the Soviets, by all means at their disposal, will seek to "unify" Germany under the Red banner by similar methods and tactics as those applied in Korea.

The Society for the Prevention of World War III therefore urges the President, the Secretary of State and the High Commissioner for Germany to make it clear at this very moment, that there will be no withdrawal of American troops from Berlin or from any other part of Germany. A joint three power declaration to this effect by the United States, France and Great Britain would help dissipate any doubts existing among Europeans that, as a result of the so-called Soviet "peace" offensive, the Western Allies might, sooner or later, be fooled into withdrawing their occupation forces from Germany.

Self-Service Gas

I read with interest one of your articles on the self-service gas station controversy. The people who have accused Wills' establishment of presenting a fire hazard are actually insulting the public. Everyone knows the association of retail gasoline dealers is merely maneuvering to keep their prices up.

I have spent a little time in California and there the self-service stations are at a peak. True, there are no loafing jobs available, but there are plenty of jobs for attendants. Gasoline costs the consumer less under the self-service system; thereby affecting a considerable saving for them over a period of time.

U. N. Force

International developments growing out of the situation in Korea have dramatized once again the need to put tangible power into the hands of the United Nations.

Without a police force of its own, it was necessary for the U. N. to call on nationals of its member nations to undertake the job which should have been carried on by a good right arm of the United Nations.

The United States Government might well lead the way by providing simply: (1) that 1 percent of the current U. S. military budget be given to the United Nations for use in the development of a U. N. police force; (2) that the United States add an additional 1 percent a year for the next 10 years; and (3) that the United States offer to match additional contributions to the U. N. security force made by other nations.

This formula would have the advantage of starting the process of national disarmament without cutting the available security forces.

This action of the United States could serve as a catalytic force to bring very substantial support around the world as a whole. If the Soviet Union did not fall in line, it would lose a substantial part of its current "peace offensive."

Evaluating The Economic Report

I have been very much interested in the position which The Washington Post takes in opposing the partisan reports and efforts of the Council of Economic Advisers. I think the point should be made of calling for the reexamination of two questions: What is the relationship between politics and economics? What ought to be the proper relationship of a staff agency to the chief executive?

It seems to me that politics and economics are inseparable. If we go back as far as the mercantilist school we find that the economic thought of the period was tied to basic political notions. They went hand in hand. The coming to the fore of laissez-faire was more than merely the revolt of the individualist against state-supported mercantilism. The state itself in time gave full support to the new economics and immensely aided its development. In our own country during the nineteenth century particularly the tariff and patent laws, to mention examples, were evidences of political decisions made in order to advance a type of economic thinking.

It seems to me that we frequently overlook the fact that the objectives of the Administration in Washington from time to time may be achieved by more than one way. For example, let us suppose that we find ourselves in a situation of rapidly rising unemployment and that this and other signs point to a sharp recession, what ought to be the fiscal program of the Administration?

One might be able to think of several possible solutions to the problem. Which among these alternatives ought to be chosen? The decision that will be made will be the Administration's decision or it might be the decision of the legislature and the executive acting jointly. At any rate the decision, although it involves economic thinking, will be a political one and the kind of economics employed will probably be the kind that is most consistent with the dominant political thinking of the moment.

The role of the Council of Economic Advisers in all of this activity is that of a staff agency. As a part of the Executive Office of the President the Council will advise and assist the executive in the formulation of a program. The Council will undoubtedly be exceedingly influential in this assignment. What could be more logical than that the Chief Executive should make use of his principal advisers in "selling" his program to the Congress?

I fully accept the idea that we will continue to have partisan activity with respect to the Economic Report of the President. But Congress, on its side, should engage in not merely partisan activity but thoughtful partisan activity.

In the first instance, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report might have a larger professional staff to assist the committee in its study and analysis of the President's proposals. Much of the work such staff members might do would overlap the activities of the staffs of other committees. An idea worth examining is for the two Houses jointly or separately to establish a pool of staff members who could be shifted around from time to time as the work load might vary among the Committees on Appropriations, Ways and Means, Finance, Banking and Currency, etc.

Despite the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 Congress is still inadequately prepared to evaluate the Administration's proposals. Since the President is so far ahead of Congress in the indispensable research paramount to a thoughtful decision Congress spends much of its time in purely partisan activity. Legislative committees do not need to engage in all of the investigations that the administrative agencies do but they do need to do enough to test the validity of the Administration's proposals. Until that is done we will continue to find that the frequent answer of a legislative committee to an Administration proposal is mere partisan activity.

Indiana Day

It is really too bad about the 3000 visiting women from Indiana not finding things "hunky dory" on their arrival in Washington for the Indiana Day celebration. The United States has a war in her lap and top Government officials are much too busy to be handshaking.

'Beedle' a Convert to Psychology

By Drew Pearson

A HARD-BITTEN soldier, Lieut. Gen. "Beedle" Smith, gave Senators an earful recently on the No. 1 question of the Korean war—ideology.

"In a struggle of this kind," testified Smith, who was once ambassador to Russia, "force and the threat of force do not change men's minds or win their loyalties. It will pay us to sit down and analyze why Communist troops in Korea are fighting like the devil, while the ones we consider to represent democracy are not doing so well. Soviet propaganda has been extremely effective."

"It's an idle thing to preach democracy to a man with an empty belly," General Smith told the Senators. "The thing that interests him first is a rice bowl, or something for himself and his family. And pure generosity is not always appreciated. People don't like to be poor relations, and that's why it's more important to get them on their feet than hand them platters."

The former ambassador told how his own scorn for psychological warfare turned to awe after he served in Russia. When he was ordered at the start of World War II to add a psychological warfare staff, Smith explained: "I thought it was a group of crackpots. I have paid dearly for that, but I have learned."

"In the Army," he continued, philosophically, "we've talked a lot about morale, but we always translated it in terms of good food for the soldier, good hospitalization, good quarters, and the like. We never thought in terms of the psychological, although we know civil wars are the most violently fought because those are the only wars in which those doing the fighting really understand why they are fighting."

General Smith also gave some examples of how Voice of America programs are penetrating into Russia itself to an audience he estimated at 3,000,000 to 4,000,000. An American official traveling on a Soviet boat up the Volga river was surpriser to hear "The Voice" come over the ship's radio.

"Oh, yes," the radio operator said casually, "I tune it in every night."

"Everyone was listening," General Smith continued. "They did not look at each other. They sat looking straight ahead."

He also told how all over Moscow, Russians were laughing at the absurd Radio Moscow version of Madame Kosenkina's leap for freedom from the Soviet consulate in New York.

"The Russians believed the Voice," General Smith commented, "because they have had a secret police for over 600 years."

Senate's Poet Laureate

NO ONE would ever suspect harassed, hard-working Senator Scott Lucas of Illinois, the Senate majority leader, of having a poet's soul. But the other day the newsreels, posing him for an action shot, commanded: "Move your head to the right! Senator, pick up your pen and write something!"

Lucas, "boss of the Senate," meekly obeyed. As the flash bulbs flared, he wrote, After the photographers were finished, one of them picked up the pad on which Lucas had written:

"Photographers like Senators old;
Are persnickety, cantankerous, and bold;
They order you here, and order you there,
But like Senators old, they are always fair."

Highlights in Korea

HJALMAR PROCOPE, former Finnish minister, met Herbert Hoover, the former President, in New York the other day. The conversation turned to the United Nations.

"That organization is really taking aggressive action," said Hoover, "for the simple reason the Russians are not present to veto. But when I suggested recently a reorganization of the U. N. to exclude Russia, I was denounced."

U. N. diplomats don't entirely agree with Herbert Hoover. They fear many nations near the Russian orbit would leave the U. N. if Russia were forcibly ejected. But they do consider it lucky that Russia stayed away at this particular time.

Russia May Return

HOWEVER, whether right or wrong, the Russian absence may soon come to an abrupt end.

Under the monthly rotation system, the presidency of the Security Council will fall to Russia on August 1. Observers predict that when that session convenes, Soviet Delegate Jacob Malik will be in the chair.

In the first place, the Russians are sticklers for protocol and procedure, take very seriously the duties of office. The man who has been actually counting the votes in recent meetings of the Security Council is the Russian assistant secretary-general, Constantin Zinchenko. The voting was on aggression against Korea, but Zinchenko performed his functions just the same.

The Russians now realize their absence prevented them from using the veto in the Korean controversy; so if they could get back without loss of face, they would like to grab that veto again.

That's why the Soviets may seize the presidency of the Council on August 1 as an excuse to return to the U. N.

Note—Figuring the Russians might do this, the recent resolutions on Korea were drafted in such a way that they would not be dependent on subsequent action of the Council. In other words, even if the veto is used after August 1, the Korean action still stands.

Cutting Korea

HERE are the Senators who last week ignored the Korean crisis and voted to cut all foreign aid, including Korea, by 10 percent.

The vote for the cut was 11 to 10 behind closed doors of the Senate Apropriations Committee, and the Senators were anxious to avoid having the public know how they voted.

Ferguson of Michigan and Wherry of Nebraska, both Republicans, led the fight for the cut. Cordon of Oregon, also a Republican, first voted for the cut, then made a deal with Robertson of Virginia to reconsider the vote.

However, Ferguson and Wherry talked him out of it by arguing that the committee report was already being printed and that the question could be settled on the Senate floor anyhow.

Others who voted to short-change Korea and our other allies at this hour of crisis were: Democratic Senators McKellar of Tennessee, Ellender of Louisiana, Russell of Georgia, McClelland of Arkansas, Chavez of New Mexico and Thomas of Oklahoma (by proxy); also Republican Senators Bridges of New Hampshire and Young of North Dakota.

War Problems Listed

HERE are some of the problems United States troops have had to contend with in crowded, bloody Korea. . . . Korean highways are nothing but jeep trails which accommodate trucks in dry weather. But now it's the rainy season. . . . The one dock where United States supplies can be delivered has such poor facilities that ships have to be unloaded almost by hand. . . . We have plenty of transport ships, but no LST's that can discharge on beaches without dock facilities. . . . MacArthur has plenty of tanks in Japan, but the problem has been getting them to Korea.

Solomons to Crisfield

New Ferry Is Pushed

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

EASTERN SHORE Marylanders are dreaming about a Bay ferry to bring them closer to Washington, but there is a big IF in their dreams.

It is the disposition of the boats now used by the Sandy Point-Matapeake Ferry, which goes out of existence when the Chesapeake Bay Bridge is completed in 1952.

If these boats could be put into operation between Solomons, on the west side of the bay, and Crisfield, on the east, enthusiastic shoremen point out, the distance between Washington and Crisfield would be cut from 6 hours to 3½. Eastern Shore Marylanders could find a ready market for their seafood, strawberries and produce here, and Washingtonians could cut their traveling time to shore beaches now in existence or being developed.

Hearty advocate of the shore ferry is Maryland State Senator Louis Goldstein who, with State Senator Harry T. Phoebus, sponsored a resolution in 1949 authorizing the Maryland State Roads Commission to make a study of the idea's feasibility.

Big fly in the ointment is a 1947 Maryland law which specifically provides that when the 41 million dollar bay bridge goes into operation on July 1, 1952, the ferry is to be "disposed of" and the proceeds from its disposal applied to the financing of the bridge.

The General Assembly, therefore, is committed to applying the disposal price of the ferry to the bridge debt.

Phoebus Pledges Bill

BUT Senator Phoebus, up for reelection this fall, has promised that, if he returns to the Assembly, he will introduce a bill to establish the ferry service between Solomons and Crisfield, using the Sandy Point-Matapeake boats.

If this should pass, it would pave the way for a private operator to move in, buy the Matapeake-Sandy Point boats, and start the Crisfield-Solomons ferry. Such a proposition would have to be approved by the Public Service Commission.

Senator Goldstein says that a Crisfield-Solomons ferry would be "the biggest thing that ever happened" to the Eastern Shore area. And he believes that such a ferry would need to make only three round trips a day, at morning, noon and night, to accommodate the traffic.

For shoremen, Senator Goldstein says, it would mean the opening of the "biggest cash market in the United States—Washington"—to easy access.

A survey of other towns in the three Eastern Shore counties of Dorchester, Wicomico and Somerset shows that Crisfield is not the only town which would benefit from the ferry.

Dairy Farms Cited

CAMBRIDGE has seafood canneries, packs oysters; it has commercial fisheries, grows tomatoes, wheat, corn.

Crisfield, in addition to extensive commercial fisheries, has dairy, poultry and stock farms, grows strawberries, tomatoes, potatoes; has a meat-packing plant.

Pocomoke City has potatoes, corn, beans, tomatoes; manufactures canned goods, crates.

Princess Anne has fruit and vegetable canneries, saw mills, nurseries; grows strawberries, tomatoes, beans and potatoes.

Salisbury goes in for fruit farms; has strawberries, cucumbers, cantaloupes; manufactures textiles; has meat and seafood-packing plants.

Snow Hill has poultry-dressing plants, hatcheries; ships fruits, vegetables.

In urging the lower bay ferry, Senator Goldstein describes the new Chesapeake Bay bridge as designed to handle the Maine to Florida traffic. The ferry from Solomons to Crisfield would make Crisfield 60 miles from Washington, instead of 200, as now.

Route 5 Artery

THE route of the Eastern Shore-bound travelers would be Route 5 from Washington through Camp Springs, Waldorf to Hughesville, then Route 231 to Benedict. There, a new Patuxent River bridge, connecting Charles, Calvert and St. Mary's counties is now under construction. It is scheduled for completion next spring. At Prince Frederick, the traveler would pick up route 2 to Solomons and the ferry.

The ferry route, Senator Goldstein said, would be across the bay and through Hooper Strait, between Bloodworth Island and upper Dorchester County, then down Tangier Sound to Crisfield.

The water distance is about 24 miles, which Senator Goldstein figures as a two-hour trip. The present ferry trip is four miles, and takes 30 minutes.

Some Maryland officials are inclined to discount the ferry proposal as too costly in operation. They point out that in addition to the length of the trip, ferry operators would have to provide very sturdy boats for the long bay crossing.

Rough in Winter?

AT SOME points in the proposed route, they said, the Chesapeake is practically in open water, and winter crossings would be rough.

Albert S. Gordon, executive assistant to the chairman of the Maryland State Roads Commission, said the SRC has not yet undertaken the survey ordered by the 1949 Assembly on the ferry proposal. He explained that the commission was waiting for up-to-date traffic patterns, which will be radically changed by the completion of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge.

He said he would be unwilling to estimate the comparative changes in distance and time to points across the bay should the ferry be put into operation.

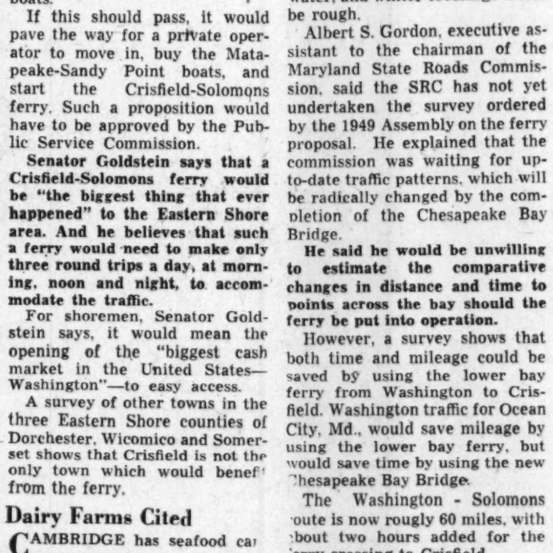
However, a survey shows that both time and mileage could be saved by using the lower bay ferry from Washington to Crisfield. Washington traffic for Ocean City, Md., would save mileage by using the lower bay ferry, but would save time by using the new Chesapeake Bay Bridge.

The Washington - Solomons route is now rougly 60 miles, with about two hours added for the ferry crossing to Crisfield.

Using the existing ferry, Crisfieldians must go 106 miles to reach Matapeake, 4 across water, and another 40 to reach Washington.

Under the proposed lower bay ferry, vacationers bound for Ocean City would have about 50 miles to go from Crisfield to Ocean City, making the total trip about 110 miles plus the ferry.

Using the Chesapeake Bay Bridge, Ocean City-bound traffic would travel about 150 miles.



Proposed new ferry would bring D.C. two and one-half hours closer to Crisfield

Matter of Fact

There's Still a Little Time Left

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

ONLY three weeks after the attack on Korea, predictions are already being made that the Kremlin will shortly attack another soft spot and thus unleash a general war. The Soviet Politburo must indeed be almost irresistibly tempted to further adventure by the spectacle of the whole ordinary power of the United States being committed in Korea. Yet the evidence on balance suggests that the men in the Kremlin have not as yet yielded to this temptation.

This evidence falls into several parts. One part is found in Korea. It is considered highly significant that since the United States intervened in Korea, American airpower over the battlefront has not been seriously challenged.

Soviet airpower in the Far East is at least a match for American airpower based on Japan. In every other category, the Soviets clearly intend to use every means to force the American troops off the Asiatic mainland. They have already committed the best Russian heavy tanks and long-range artillery. But they have not committed Soviet planes.

According to the best intelligence evaluation, men in the Kremlin are still unwilling to invite an open war by sending Russians in to fight Americans—and there are simply not enough non-Russian pilots to fly the Russian planes. This does not mean that the Soviets are unwilling to risk a general war—they have of course already done so. But it is taken to mean that they are still unwilling to invite a general war.

British-Red Talks

THE SECOND item of evidence comes from Moscow. There the British Ambassador, Sir David Kelly, has held a number of conversations on the Korean crisis at the Soviet Foreign Office. The Soviet diplomats have been, as always, cautious and elliptic. But they have hinted that the Korean problem could easily be solved, on a satisfactory basis, if only the United States were reasonable—if only, for example, the United States would recognize Communist China.

This is, of course, a rather transparent attempt to drive a wedge between the United States and its British ally. Nevertheless, the use of naked force is probably not contemplated as long as such diplomatic expedients are being resorted to. The tenor of the conversations, moreover, has not been warlike—there have been no heavy-lauded hints, for example, that the British, in view of their exposed position, should reconsider their policy.

Third, there are no signs of any special preparation for war either in the Soviet Union or by the Red Army in Eastern Europe. The Soviet Union is always, of course, on a war basis. By American standards, Russia has been mobilized ever since the last war ended. But those extraordinary measures, like armament and transport stockpiling on the frontiers which must precede an all-out attack, have not been taken.

Finally, there is the reaction to the Korean crisis within the European Communist high command. Reports from clandestine sources on this internal reaction have come from such points as Paris, Rome, Stockholm, Istanbul, Warsaw, Prague, and Bucharest. All these reports have been very similar.

There has been universal surprise and dismay among the top Communist leaders at the American response to the Soviet challenge in Korea. But there is compelling negative evidence that the Kremlin has not warned the Communist leaders to expect war. For the Communist hard core has not been alerted for resistance and sabotage in Western Europe, nor has the terror become sterner in eastern Europe.

Temptation Magnified

IN WEIGHING this optimistic evidence, however, it is necessary to remember that the men in the Kremlin were utterly unprepared for the situation which now confronts them. They did not expect any American response in Korea. They did not expect all of America's strength to be committed in Korea. They had not thought about what they would do, if there were no Western forces anywhere to oppose the Red Army or the satellite armies, or both, in any aggression they might choose to commit, anywhere along their frontier. This temptation now squarely, surprisingly confronts them, and is daily magnified by the progressive exposure in Korea of America's shocking un-preparedness.

There is no saying the men in the Kremlin will not be overcome by this temptation in the end, despite the deterrent effort of our strategic air force and atomic stockpile. Indeed, those who should know best predict that another aggression will eventually be committed by the Kremlin, unless the existing deterrent is rapidly and powerfully reinforced.

They say further that there is only one way to do this—to confront Stalin and his colleagues with the awe-inspiring spectacle of the entire resources, the whole wealth and manpower of the United States, being mobilized for war. Only by mobilizing, only by thus indicating present determination and hinting of fearful penalties to come, can we prevent the war that the whole world fears. Thus, if we do what we ought to do, there is still much hope. But if we do not do what we ought to do, there is no hope at all.

London Is Jittery Over Korea

Hold That A-Bomb, British Ask

THE British people and the newspapers they read have suddenly warmed up to the Americans.

Bad news from Korea—American losses, atrocities, battles against outlandish odds—has brought a virtual end to headlines tending to ridicule the American military effort and to publish jokes poking fun at the fighting qualities of the GI.

Deeply sympathetic as they now are, the British still make cracks about the Korean war, but there's no malice in them. It's the sort of kidding they gave themselves when the picture was unfavorable during the early years of the last war.

"We stood alone for a year, think they'll last it out, mate?" is a sample of current quips.

Says the conservative Yorkshire Post: "We must stand by the United States as the United States would stand by us. Americans are in trouble. We must help them as if they were our own troops."

British trade unionists, who comprise a section of the population which can be unusually critical of America, were happy to learn this week that American unions have come out in full support of the Korean war.

This week's upsurge of British sympathy for America will end bitter headlines but it will not remove one persistent fear in the mind of the average Briton.

Demands in Washington this week that the United States employ the atom bomb in the Korean war have been widely publicized here and have deeply disturbed most Britons.

Britons in conversations made these two points: (1) dropping the bomb would mean a general war, and (2) dropping the bomb would bring atomic warfare to Britain and to London.

Britons are no more humane than Americans; they're just more bomb-conscious. The British in their exposed position are naturally jittery about demands in the United States that the atom bomb be used in the Korean war.

Lustron Venture Costly to U. S.

By Ysabel Rennie

WITH the bankruptcy of the Lustron Corp. there comes to an end Uncle Sam's first venture into risk capital, an experiment in prefabricated housing which has cost the American taxpayer many millions.

Only four short years ago, Lustron promised a revolution in housing: homes of gleaming porcelain enameled steel, mass-produced in a converted airplane factory and carried off the assembly line by trailer trucks for erection anywhere in the country.

The homes were originally the dream of an engineer, Carl G. Strandlund, vice president of the Chicago Vitreous Enamel Co. In 1946, when he could not get steel for gas stations, Strandlund sold Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt on steel enamel houses as a solution to the postwar housing shortage.

In 1947 Congress authorized the RFC to lend up to 50 million dollars for prefabricated houses, and after Strandlund and several others raised an equity of $840,000, RFC made the first of its loans to the new Lustron Corp. The company went into production in the wartime Curtiss-Wright plant in Columbus, Ohio, with plans to turn out a thousand houses a month by June, 1948.

As of today, Lustron has built only 2000 houses and RFC stands to lose more than 30 million dollars on the experiment.

What went wrong? Several things. But the significant fact is that neither engineering nor production has been the basic trouble.

Lustron turned out exactly the house it had promised. It is made of sheet steel, porcelain enameled inside and out, and well-insulated in fiberglass. Both two and three-bedroom models feature automatic dishwashers and washing machines, built-in cabinets and closets with sliding doors. The house never needs to be painted, and inside or out it can be kept clean with a damp rag.

Dealers Like Them

OWNERS, at first skeptical, are said to be enthusiastic. The Lustron house has stood up to Minnesota winters, Southern summers and Florida hurricanes. Dealers, many of them contractors of long experience, consider them much better than anything of comparable cost built by conventional methods.

Nor, despite initial bugs, did the assembly line prove to be a problem. Lustron has turned out 27 houses a day on a test run, and as promised, the panels come off the line onto waiting trucks.

The problems are at the other end. No factory can turn out more houses than are sold. And Lustron sales were slow. The public was cautious, dealerships had to be set up, local building codes were a major headache.

But perhaps the major obstacle has been the financing. When the houses are first loaded onto trucks, they are chattels, and need a special kind of loan. When they are erected, they are homes, and need a mortgage.

Both VA and FHA have accepted them for financing. But local appraisers have been too conservative in their appraisals, with the result that the buyer has to have a substantial down payment. The dealer who wants to sell Lustrons has to have a lot of capital.

Last year the Lustron dealer for New Jersey signed a contract with the Army to build 300 homes at Fort Dix at an average cost of $9500 apiece. Army estimates for convential houses of the same size had been $16,500. The deal fell through when RFC refused to provide financing.

Why did RFC refuse a loan which might have gotten Lustron into mass production? It was becoming politically sensitive about its already heavy loans to the company, and did not want to commit money on the financing end when it had put so much into production.

Yet financing, not production, was Lustron's problem. In order to get into the mass production of cars, General Motors had to set up its Acceptance Corp. to finance sales. Lustron needs its own mortgage company.

Despite the unfortunate publicity, the house is a good one. Tests by the Bureau of Standards, the Armour Institute and the University of Illinois show it can stand three times the wind and stress loads of conventional houses. Private engineering studies indicate that 8000 sales a year will pull Lustron out of the red. And with public acceptance pyramiding, a survey of 120 Lustron dealers last March indicated that the 8000 home goal would probably be reached within 12 months.

An industrial revolution takes time and money. The question is whether it should have been the Government's money. No public agency can exercise business judgment under the kind of political pressure which has built up around Lustron.

Even today the venture could probably be saved with another 10 million dollars. Unfortunately, whether it gets the additional loan is no longer a financial issue, but a political one.

The Gallup Poll

6 in 10 of Us Drink

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., July 15.—Six out of every ten U. S. adults drink beer or other intoxicating beverages, though many of these are only occasional drinkers, and liquor has been a cause of trouble in the homes of one out of every seven drinkers.

Those are the highlights in a national survey on drinking habits in which interviewers for the Institute questioned a balanced cross-section of voters in all sections and in all walks of life.

The survey found that one in every six persons, who use liquor, drink almost every day, and about one fourth drink "a few times a week."

The survey inquiry on frequency of drinking and the proportion of homes where liquor is a problem originated from a suggestion by the Rev. Leland Stark of the Church of the Epiphany in Washington, D. C. Commenting on earlier Institute surveys on drinking, the Rev. Stark declared in a letter to the Institute that ". . . it would be helpful to know the percentage of Americans in whom drink has become a serious problem."

In conducting this survey the Institute, as in an earlier survey on drinking, first asked each person whether he ever had occasion to use alcoholic beverages and found that approximately 6 in every 10 do.

All persons in the survey who say they drink either regularly or occasionally — constituting approximately 6 out of every 10—were asked:

"Has liquor ever been a cause of trouble in your home?"

Yes, it has	14%
No, it has not	86
	100%

Customer . . . incognito!

Of course we know him well, as so many thousands would if they saw his photograph, for he is prominent in the land.

He comes to us frequently. From us he selects his hats, his shoes and all that he wears from head to foot. To us, he is not so much a prominent figure in our country's affairs, as a good customer and business friend we love to serve.

Yet a stranger in our store would receive the same courteous attention. For, from casual buyers we have built a business. Our oldest, most loyal and beloved customer originally was an unknown man who bought something from us.

It is our joy to serve each person as if we knew he would become a valued customer.

Isn't this the kind of store where you would like to come—a friendly, companionable place where implicit mutual confidence makes purchasing a pleasure?

Milk Row Plays to Full Houses

By Harry N. Stull

NOT since the days of the hearings on music on the buses has the board room of the District Building seen such a crowd of persons interested in a civic matter, as appeared at the milk hearing. The crowd was so great as to cause the hearing to be shifted to a larger auditorium. Most vocal were the dairymen of nearby communities who were unsparing in their applause when a point was made by those opposing the bringing in of milk which met the requirements of the United States Public Health Service but would not qualify under the standards set up by the District Health Office. Most of the discussion was of the relative merits of steam and chemical sterilization of milk containers.

STULL

The public, of course, is interested in the maintenance of proper health standards and the cost to them of the product under present requirements. It has been furnished with full page ads, special articles and interviews with so-called experts to an extent that has created confusion.

Whether the present milk producers and distributors have set up a virtual monopoly under existing regulations is, despite court decisions, still moot.

In the last analysis, Congress will decide the controversy which is really one between the milk producers in nearby Maryland and Virginia and those of the Middle West. Already a Senator from a milk-producing State has publicly announced that if the Commissioners do not amend the present milk regulations, Congress will do it for them.

This illustrates how little the residents of the District actually participate in determining their own municipal affairs. The consumers of milk in the District of Columbia will stand helplessly on the sidelines while the elected officials of other jurisdictions determine what kind and how much milk we will be permitted to consume. Truly, a fine example of democracy in our Nation's Capital.

'In Lieu of Taxes'

AS this is written there is doubt whether the Federal Government will pay 12 million dollars toward "the Federal City," or whether that amount will be reduced by 10 percent. The House voted for the smaller sum, while the Senate insisted on the larger amount.

This appropriation, sometimes erroneously termed a "contribution," is actually a payment in lieu of taxes for municipal services rendered the vast amount of Federal property in the District. The Congress has rejected every measure that would put an end to this annual guessing game and set up a definite formula by which the Federal Government's payment could be determined.

In truth, the Congress has, since the repeal of the 50-50 and 60-40 provisions, consistently refused to accept this payment as an obligation, contenting itself with the payment of whatever sum Congressional leaders agreed upon.

This was brought out on the floor of the Senate when a very distinguished Senator stated: "The District budget will show a surplus, and the Federal budget will show a deficit. So, under the conditions of war, if we can this year save money for the Federal Government we should do so." It is gratifying to note that the Senate did not agree to this type of reasoning.

According to certain schools of thought on the Hill, Congress, having imposed greater taxes on the people of the District, which this year may result in a surplus, Congress should then reduce its payment on the grounds of economy. If, for some reason, future years may result in deficits, would Congress then correspondingly increase their payment? The "Noes" have it unanimously.

Regulating Goats

A BILL, introduced by the Chairman of the House District Committee, would regulate the keeping and running at large of goats in the District. (The bill has reference to animals and not to human beings.)

We hope the committee will give the bill its careful consideration. Do not allow wars or threats of wars, sirs, to interfere with this earth-shaking problem. Let no member delay the passage of this measure by a crippling amendment covering deodorized skunks. Gentlemen, lay aside billion dollar appropriations and legislation affecting our armed services. Give your best efforts to solving this goat question.

Reform Sought in Loudoun

By Benjamin Muse

LOUDOUN is one of the most beautiful and attractive counties in Virginia. It was once the home of James Monroe and is today the home of George Catlett Marshall and Arthur Godfrey. Rich in both history and horses, it is the home of many another gentleman of wealth and distinction, or just wealth.

MUSE

It is also the home of some 2100 everyday people, who leave their politics largely to a tight but respectable little political ring, which adheres faithfully to the State Democratic (Byrd) organization. Republicans account for one member of the board of supervisors, but both Republicans and antimachine Democrats are neatly under control.

The perennial feud between the board of supervisors and the school board furnishes most of the political fireworks. The majority of those who vote are content to take the advice of their friends at the courthouse and leave the set-up about as it is.

That is not fertile soil for the advocates of a radical change in the form of county government, or any other radical change. Overhauling local government, in fact—with a general upsetting of the status quo and the elimination of some top officials—is a Herculean task in any county. But that is what the Loudoun County League of Women Voters has set out to do.

Fairfax Reforms Cited

MAYBE the movement for county government reform which is sweeping over Fairfax County next door had something to do with it. At any rate, the brave Loudoun ladies are off on another campaign to bring in the county executive plan. The executive plan is a slight variation from the county manager form of government, which is to be voted upon in Fairfax. It is now in operation in just one other Virginia County, Albemarle—which, incidentally is Governor Battle's home county.

This is the third effort in Loudoun, the first having been in 1944. The second effort to bring the question to a vote was last year, and it came to a strange end. The board of supervisors adopted a resolution on July 21, requesting the judge of the circuit court to call a referendum on the question, following one of the two procedures prescribed by the Optional Forms Act.

Judge J. R. H. Alexander delayed action for a month. (The executive plan, like the manager plan, takes certain important powers away from the circuit court judge, and gives them to the board of supervisors.) On August 25, the Loudoun board of supervisors rescinded its resolution calling for a referendum.

The plan of the League of Women Voters now is to bring about a referendum next November by the circulation of petitions. If the signatures of 10 percent of the qualified voters are secured, a referendum must be called.

Byrd Ordered Study

IN LOUDOUN, incidentally, there is the usual paradox of the most enthusiastic followers of Senator Harry F. Byrd taking a position in violent opposition to the county government reform which Byrd himself fathered. As Governor, Byrd ordered the study of county government from which the executive and manager plans developed.

In his recent interview with Agnes Meyer, Byrd pointed with pride to the fact that he "recommended amendments to the State constitution" making the change possible. Nevertheless, the Loudoun newspaper mouthpiece of the Byrd organization is already screaming with horror at the executive plan proposal, and suggests that to advocate such a thing is to "engage in revolution."

The provision of the county executive plan which provides that school board members shall be appointed by, and serve "at the pleasure of" the board of supervisors should have a peculiar appeal to Loudoun folks in view of recent events in that county.

Loudoun's 10-year-old row between board of supervisors and school board is almost a record in Virginia, and the two boards are now in another deadlock—over the school consolidation question. Adoption of the executive plan would result in the election of a new board of supervisors, which would handpick its own school board. That ought to solve at least one problem.

But a respectful tip to the League of Women Voters: You will need the help of a league of pretty tough male vote-getters to put the plan across.

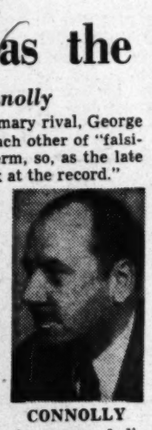
Mahoney Has the Voices Confused

By James P. Connolly

GOVERNOR LANE and his primary rival, George P. Mahoney, have accused each other of "falsifying," to use the gentleman's term, so, as the late Al Smith used to say: "Let's look at the record."

In making his charge, Mr. Mahoney quoted or misquoted the Governor as having said the sales tax is 40 percent of the State's revenues."



CONNOLLY

What the Governor really said (according to press reports of his speech) was "the sales tax represents about 40 percent of the State's total general revenue." A far different thing. The difference is $63,216,609. Maybe Mr. Mahoney wasn't listening very fast.

The $63,216,609 are special fund receipts, dedicated to special purposes. The State's total revenue, as estimated in the budget for the fiscal year 1951, is $143,307,308, of which the sales tax receipts, $27,500,000, are 19.02 percent.

General receipts, applicable to practically any purpose, are $80,090,699, or more accurately, about 35 percent.

All these figures are readily verifiable in the budget book.

Mr. Mahoney imagined the Governor telling the people "I put you 219 million dollars in debt in my first administration . . . and now I am getting ready to put you in debt 700 million dollars more." Here, since the challenger was indulging frankly in a flight of personal fancy, he merely was putting words of his own in the Governor's mouth.

The recorded State debt is 83 million dollars, about 25 million dollars of which was contracted before this administration. The 219 million dollars is the total authorized by the Legislature but not yet issued—in other words, not an accomplished fact.

The Voices Were Confused

THE 700 million dollar figure is also another figure of speech and not the Governor's or the Legislature's. It was Robert M. Reindollar, chairman of the State Roads Commission, talking, only Mr. Mahoney had the voices confused. Mr. Reindollar was day-dreaming of an ideal road system of the distant future that might cost 700 million dollars.

John Smith, taxpayer, listening to the din of all these digits and loose tongues, might feel he is in hock up to his neck, but let's see where the red ink really steps. Maryland's gross debt at the close of the fiscal year 1949 was 68 million dollars and the per capita share was $31.85.

The average per capita debt of all 48 States was $28.16 and Maryland ranked seventeenth. The per capita debt of her next door neighbor, Delaware, was $160.75. The Maryland taxpayer might feel better now.

These statistics are from another convenient and comforting little reference work," a summary of State government finances for the fiscal year 1949," published in May of this year by the United States Department of Commerce.

Maryland's real estate tax, applied to debt service, is at one of its lowest in history and if the State's debt is at the danger point, the bond market is recklessly ignoring the red flag. Maryland bonds sell readily at low interest rates. The last issue, in June, bears a rate of 1.5 percent but the premium paid the State reduces the interest cost to 1.41 percent.

Pennies Not Marked

A FAVORITE Mahoney campaign cry is that the sales tax does not contribute to Maryland's road, school and hospital programs. Well . . . the pennies are not marked money, of course, and it is impossible to trace the course of every copper after it reaches the public till and joins the general pool.

But all the hospital program and practically all the school program are financed from general funds and the bulk of the $56,500,000 is made up from the sales tax and income tax returns.

The sales tax is the State's third largest revenue source.

In a bulletin last December 7 the commission on governmental efficiency and economy noted that appropriations in the State's general improvement program included $79,527,670 for education and $26,251,355 for health and hospitals. The bulletin added:

"To finance this program the 1949 General Assembly made available $25,539,300 from the general fund surplus for hospital and other institutional improvements. . . ."

No one has accused the E. & E. Commission, an independent, nonpartisan watchdog of the public purse, of "falsifying." It stands to reason that $27,500,000 in sales taxes, the State's third largest lump sum, contributes to the general welfare if only by releasing other sums for special purposes—unless there were a $27,500,000 rat hole somewhere, and if there were, the E. & E. Commission would be there like a terrier.

The Magazine Rack

THE LADIES MAGAZINES take it on the chin this week from Mary McCarthy, in the new Reporter.

Vogue, says the author, whose pen is lightly dipped in acid, once treated its provincial subscribers in the "cruel . . . manner of an upper servant." Succumbing to the pressure of social change, however, she says the magazine now fabricates "a democratic snobbery, a snobbery for everyone."

Mademoiselle, she goes on, listing it among the less pretentious fashion journals, caters to "the dream mentality of a civilization of office conscripts," offering them its own mass produced version of individual attention.

Some pointedly drawn caricatures of modern fashion plates, by Fischetti, accompany this critique, titled "Up the Ladder from Charm to Vogue."

In a weightier vein, the Reporter also turns its eye on India, Pakistan, and Korea.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

EDGAR KEMLER, the former Baltimorean whose "The Irreverent Mr. Mencken," published by Little, Brown, is doing nicely, told the story at lunch the other day of how he came to do the book.

An undergraduate at Johns Hopkins, he was put in charge of the student paper. About the same time he had read a Modern Library edition of Mencken's "Selected Prejudices" and with the enthusiasm of youth "thought it the greatest writing ever.

"You know how young people are, if it is the greatest writing in the world, then everyone should try to write like it—it took me some years to get over it, and I still think it is one of the greatest styles in English literature."

So Kemler the editor sent a copy of the college paper, which he had revamped, to Mencken. The latter wrote in acknowledgement that he thought the headlines were garish, but the writing was good, and if Kemler had any more interesting projects to let him know.

Kemler's reporters were not too happy, however, and he lasted only two days as editor, but he has struck up a friendship by mail with the sage.

Kemler had graduated from Hopkins and was working as an editorial assistant on the Nation when he first met Mencken. That was in the spring of 1937 and Kemler "was scared stiff with excitement. We went to Schellhase's restaurant and then when it closed, to Miller's On the streetcar between the restaurants, I remember Mencken saying the streetcar conductors were all New Dealers."

Following the war, during which Kemler had served as an LCI skipper in the Mediterranean, he received a letter at Harvard from Mencken asking him what he had in mind.

"I told him I was thinking of writing a book and enclosed a list of subjects, including Mencken. He wrote back saying that he was flattered, but that I should probably wait until he was dead. It wasn't such a strong refusal, so I flew down to Baltimore in March, 1946. We talked it over from 10 o'clock to midnight at his home.

"His brother, August, was on my side, and he said to Mencken, 'why don't you let some one do it while you are still alive and they can get the facts straight.' At the last minute he agreed to cooperate."

And so Kemler was launched on the project.

102d Who's Who Has 3100 Pages

WHO'S WHO 1950. 3100 pp. Macmillan. $12.

FOR the one hundred and second time, this valuable reference work is published in London by Adam and Charles Black and in the United States by Macmillan Company. It is incomparable for British sketches, for which it is principally designed. There are, to be sure, entries for important people in other parts of the world, but they are listed according to the British point of view. That, in itself, is interesting. For example, Harry S. Truman receives 10 lines less than Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati. The latter's brother Robert A., United States Senator, received no mention. There is a noble effort to make this book as current as possible by the insertion of a supplement of alterations and additions to mid-January, 1950. On page 48 there is a listing of the present Royal Family.

The Story of Africa

White Witch Doctor Tells It

THE HEROINE THROWS HOT WATER ON AN AFRICAN WITCH DOCTOR
. . . he tried to interfere with her medical work

By Harrison Smith

President, the Saturday Review of Literature

WHITE WITCH DOCTOR, by Louise A. Stinetorf. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press. 276 pp. $3.

DURING the last years a few excellent novels have emerged from South Africa, which is producing a crop of writers who are able to dramatize the racial tensions between the uprooted and suppressed natives and the ruling white civilization. There have been no eloquent spokesmen of late for the millions of blacks who live according to their ancient ways in the vast central section, hidden in forests and jungles and along the banks of immense rivers.

To this almost unknown and primitive wilderness early explorers gave the name, the Dark Continent, which is now attached to all Africa. Equatorial Africa has for a century been a heavy burden on the conscience of the white world, for it lies stagnant, poverty-stricken, and dying under the control of European nations. Any book that casts a ray of light on the condition of its people is useful as well as fascinating to the curious reader.

An American woman, Louise A. Stinetorf, who has gained over the years an intimate and perhaps profound knowledge of the Belgian Congo has given us in an emotional and absorbing novel a glimpse of the native life of the Belgian Congo, from the viewpoint of a medical missionary. "White Witch Doctor" is not her own story, though written in the first person, but a blending of fiction and fact.

Like her heroine, Ellen, the author had come from a Middle-western farm, and a family used to missionaries; she spent all of her spare time later in the Congo.

The mission she finally reached after a long voyage in native boats was situated on the bank of a tributary of the Congo. It had its own traditions for the missionaries were as poor as any of the whites in the colony, and as firmly attached to their own standards and beliefs as the natives.

With the most limited equipment and a few books on medicine and surgery she was plunged into curing African diseases, mending broken bones, acting as midwife, and performing difficult operations. The jungle drums carried the news to distant villages, and she was soon accepted as the white witch doctor.

At home, Ellen had been the old maid of a large family, the handmaid of her relatives; in Africa she developed a new personality, charm and courage and self-reliance. For 25 years she gave all that she had to people ridden by superstition and fears dying of strange diseases, or starving when the crops failed.

Unlike the brothers and sisters of the mission, she was able to appreciate the ancient wisdom and deep humanity of the Negroes. She learned to "think black" and thus avoid the destruction of native customs and beliefs rooted in their knowledge of the mysteries of nature.

She fought cruelty, human sacrifices, and evil; her only enemies were the native witch doctors with their spells and incantations and their savage jealousy of her success in healing.

There is a certain crudeness in the writing of the book that prevents it from becoming an example of the art of fiction. Considered as autobiography, its literary stature is increased, for the writer seems to have achieved the remarkable feat of entering the mind and body of her heroine. She writes of the gifted and brave woman as if she herself were Ellen Burton.

Although "White Witch Doctor" is a warmhearted and exciting story, it is perhaps overwritten, a little too sentimental, but the author of so moving a narrative who has contributed so much to the reader's understanding of an unknown and strange race, can be readily forgiven minor faults.

A Counterbloc to Battle the Politbureau

THE NEW FEDERALIST. By Publius II (Owen J. Roberts, John F. Schmidt and Clarence K. Streit). Introduction by John Foster Dulles. Harper. 109 pp. $1.50.

WHERE WOULD the United States be today if the wise Founding Fathers had not welded the bankrupt, jealous and sovereign thirteen colonies into a strong Federal Union?

STREIT

Plagued by state-line barriers to the free flow of goods and people, Balkanized, politically, bewildered by a multiplicity of fluctuating currencies and impotent in international relations, such a confederation or league could not hope to survive long in a modern world.

Ever since Clarence K. Streit in 1939 issued in Union Now the first clarion call proposing an Atlantic Federal Union of the Free, thoughtful men and women of the leading democracies have been seriously considering either Nuclear or World Federation.

Major Block

UNTIL quite recently it has seemed that the principal argument against Streit's plan (to federate merely the countries where self-government and Civil Liberties are already assured) might be the violent opposition of the Russians. Likewise, the major stumbling block in the way of true World Federation was the obvious unwillingness of the Russians to join.

Since the lawless, Moscow-inspired aggression in Korea, however, Russia's intentions are so patently clear that to let that great sulking, conniving nation keep the democracies from federating seems fatal cowardice on our part.

Russian delinquency, hatred and envy still put a crimp in World Federation. But the pressure exerted by the Politbureau actually favors the welding of a democratic counterbloc. Such a nuclear union would be so overwhelmingly powerful, and would embrace such a huge proportion of the world's resources and industrial potential, that even the Muscovite warmongers would think twice before attacking. Russian victory in such a war would be an impossibility.

Super Government

WHAT IS Nuclear Federation?

It is the proposal to establish a democratic supergovernment stronger than a league, but not so tightly knit as a nation, resembling in many ways the Government of the United States or of Switzerland, which might include the following democracies: The United States, Canada, Australia ,the Union of South Africa, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, the United Kingdom, Eire and New Zealand.

What sovereign powers would such a union need to survive?

Probably no control over our domestic affairs and local problems. But certainly the right to grant citizenship and passports, to represent the federation in all diplomatic and military relations with the outside world, to create a free market within the union and regulate its interstate and foreign trade, to coin and issue money, to tax and to operate a postal service.

Some Arguments

THERE are, of course, real difficulties in establishing such a federation and a few arguments against it.

For Americans there is always the dread shadow of being pulled down to bankruptcy by the weaker members of the union. Lack of tariff protection chills the heart of many an industrialist and labor leader.

But the huge opportunities in opening up to free trade an area with 75 percent of the buying power of the world should counteract any immediate damage done our industries and would tend (as in the United States and Switzerland) to benefit all concerned.

Other critics have feared a great tide of immigration into the United States. But since citizens of the states mentioned above have not not even used their quotas in the last five years and have never constituted an immigration problem, such a "nightmare" seems unlikely.

As for the cost to United States taxpayers, in all probability our savings on armament expenditures and on foreign aid would much more than pay our part of the bill.

Small World

THERE are, of course, other problems to be solved and other pertinent questions to be asked.

But I feel the thoughtful authors of this clear and concise little book have met each one courageously and in many cases convincingly.

This much is certainly true. The world grows smaller and more interdependent daily. The trend from family tribe to gigantic nation has been constantly toward the effectiveness of the larger political body.

Making individual liberty a Bill of Rights, and human freedom the keystone; starting our Nuclear Union with only those countries capable of self-government, and adding other states only as they qualify in these respects, a democratic federation could succeed. It may, in fact, be the only manner in which we can save ourselves from eventual Communist domination of the world.

Puffed-up Books Irked Franklin

DO YOU sometimes think that many of the doorstopper books on the market these days are all pulp and no pith? So did Benjamin Franklin, who in 1785 wrote to Benjamin Vaughan as follows:

"And one can scarce see a new book without observing the excessive artifices made use of to puff up a paper of verses into a pamphlet, a pamphlet into an octavo volume, and an octavo into a quarto, with scabboardings, white lines, sparse titles of chapters and exorbitant margins to such a degree that the selling of paper seems now the object and printing on it only a pretense . . . . You have a law, I think against butchers blowing a veal to make it look fatter; why not one against booksellers blowing books to make them look bigger . . . ."

The Friends of the Princeton Library have issued the letter in an attractive format, with an introduction by Carl Van Doren.

Since Jamestown Arrival

Redding Book Notes Negro's Uphill Fight

THEY CAME IN CHAINS, Americans from Africa. By J. Saunders Redding. Lippincott. 320 pp. $3.50.

The newest addition to Lippincott's series, The Peoples of America, "They Came in Chains" is a history of the Negro in the United States.

J. Saunders Redding's admirably written narrative begins, of course, with the fateful arrival at Jamestown in 1619 of a ship carrying 20 slaves. The vessel with the Dutch flag, and the English colonists who bought the "black ivory," had begun a situation of which the end is not yet.

In the words of the historian, Louis B. Wright, "Colonists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries little realized that the black bondservants whom they bought and sold so eagerly would subtly influence their own lives, and the lives of their sons after them to the seventh and seven times the seventh generation."

In this connection, it is interesting to note that the problems and aspects of slavery which troubled, or embarrassed, later generations had been largely experienced by the time the national capitol had been established in Washington.

Exploitation Target

THE NEGRO was of a different color, so he was visibly different, and he was obviously of a lower social and intellectual order, since he came from Africa instead of Europe and it was therefore within the Divine Plan that he be exploited.

Alliances between Negro slaves and white bondservants were discouraged and intermarriage forbidden. Rebellion, murder and arson were not unknown, and economic competition from the Negro was at times feared. Laws were made to curb the freedom of free Negroes, just as in post Civil War times. After about 1750 the ideas of the humanitarian movement began to be felt, complicating consciences.

There were abolitionists, and there was even a precedent for the Emancipation Proclamation in the freeing of slaves by the British during the Revolution, during which Negroes fought in the American armies.

Nat Turner's bloody revolt, the underground railroad, the Civil War, the Freedmen's Bureau, about which there is need for more knowledge, Reconstruction, and subsequent events are treated with due proportion in Redding's history, and he notes in passing the upsurge around 1900 of the romantic literary legend of the ante bellum South —where plantation owners were all chivalrous cavaliers, breeding slaves for money was never heard of, and leopard and Ethiop, you were to understand, could never change.

Upward Moves Reviewed

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON'S role in the evolution of the Negro's status, as well as that of W. E. B. Du Bois, receives careful consideration; the development of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (apparently so much a part of Negro life that it is listed in the index only by initials), and other organizations and movements are duly noted.

Approximately the last 50 pages, about a sixth of the book, are devoted to developments since World War I, and it is reassuring to be told again the Communist Party's failure to snare any large number of Negro adherents.

In his conclusion, the least firmly written portion of the book, Reddings says that not in appeals to world opinion, but "within the framework of the nation" would Negroes "continue to concentrate their energies in the struggle for final and complete emancipation."

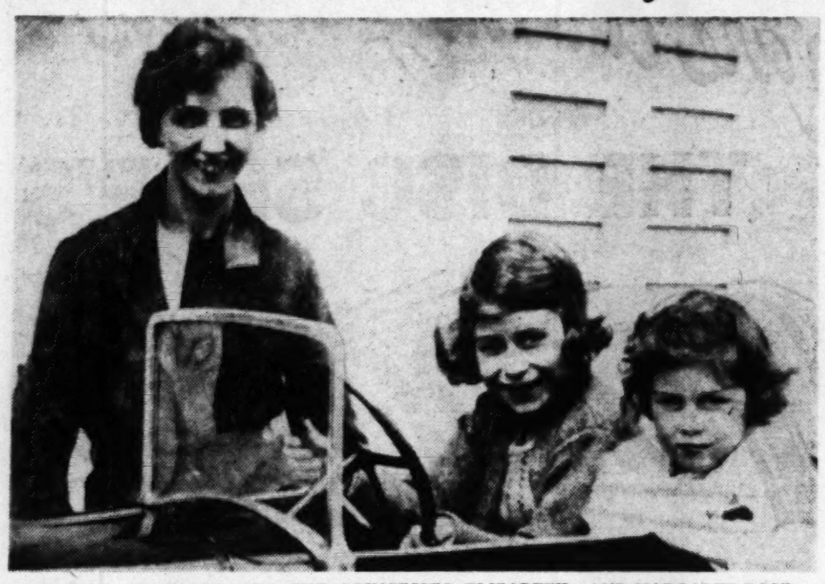
Redding's history of the Negro in the United States is dispassionate and well proportioned. Naturally sympathetic to the Negro, his subject does not run away from him and there is no special pleading. He does not hesitate to tell unkind truths on both sides of the fence.

He does appear to pussyfoot a bit about recent events, but since these are controversial matters in which all the evidence is not yet available, and he is writing a history, not a polemic, his caution is justified.

"They Came in Chains" may not please controversialists, but it will satisfy the general reader who wishes to be informed.

A Rare Look at Royalty

Two Little Girls; How They Grew



MARION CRAWFORD AND THE PRINCESSES ELIZABETH AND MARGARET ROSE
. . . photographed by the Queen

By Harrison Smith

THE LITTLE PRINCESSES. By Marion Crawford. Harcourt, Brace. 314 pp. $3.50.

SINCE the days of Queen Victoria, British royalty has represented the traditions of England's middle class. Kindness, good manners, common sense and absence of outward emotional display must be exhibited by members of the royal family in every national and personal crisis. The masses are allowed to see them as one of them, for they are in a sense living monuments to their national virtues.

Marion Crawford, a Scot who for 17 years had been governess to the royal family, was given permission not long ago to tell her story. It has already been read by millions in American and English magazines; and by grace of the Book-of-the-Month Club it is now assured an enormous sale in book form.

It would be difficult to conceive of a more skillful combination of frankness and reticence, cheerfulness and sobriety than this book from the governess of Elizabeth, the future Queen of England, and her sister, Princess Margaret.

Young for the Job

MARION CRAWFORD arrived one evening at Windsor Castle to find blond Lilibet lying awake to wait for her, while baby Margaret slept under the eyes of the jealous "nanny" who had nursed the Duchess of York, the present Queen, and her brother David. Queen Mary and King George thought Miss Crawford was too young for the job, having in mind the solemn guardians of their own secluded youth. Though she writes with humility, it was a wise choice.

She had the task of bringing up two of the most precious children in a country that was heading for a devastating war and for vast social changes. Her efforts to break with tradition, to make of them personalities who were simple, unaffected and loving, and yet fitted for their responsibilities, were obviously successful.

The story of the development of these girls to womanhood is told without ostentation. At times the book can be profoundly moving. When Uncle David abdicated his throne, the reader feels the tension in the family circle and the wall of reserve with which it was confronted in the palace, while all London was flaunting posters reading, "THE KING AND MRS. SIMPSON: CRISIS."

"I did what I could," writes Miss Crawford, "to keep the children happy during these uneasy days. We used to watch down the well of the dome (at the Duke of York's home at 145 Piccadilly) the important people coming and going. The Prime Minister, Mr. Baldwin, assorted bishops and archbishops passed below, all looking anxious and harassed, but it was plain to everyone that there was a sudden shadow over the houes."

The shadow was the approaching elevation of the Duke and Duchess to Buckingham Palace as the King and Queen of England. That vast pile of uncomfortable splendor is admirably described, as are the other palaces to which they occasionally retreated. When the war broke out, the girls and Miss Crawford went to Windsor Castle and spent four years in its freezing draughts and gloomy rooms.

A Fairy Tale Princess

THE characters of these girls are so well differentiated by Miss Crawford that we can understand that the calm and disciplined Elizabeth will make an admirable Queen, and Princess Margaret, who might have had an artistic career in private life, will be even more deeply taken to the public's heart as a princess out of a fairy tale. The book has a happy ending in Elizabeth's marriage to the young man with whom she had fallen in love, and the birth of Prince Charles. The reader can safely leave the future of British royalty in their hands.

There are humorous and tragic moments in the book, and domestic scenes as significant as the great occasions to which the public is invited: the death of old King George; Queen Mary's indomitable, majestic and sensible advice; Uncle David bringing Mrs. Simpson to tea; the King and Queen trying on their ceremonial regalia; the moments in the dungeon of Windsor Castle when the bombers were overhead; the first meeting of the little Princess with a lanky boy named Philip; the birth of Prince Charles.

The book is crowded with intimate stories and charming anecdotes of family life that could in no other way have been shown to the public. And, aside from its formal aspect, it can be read as the simple story of the growth and development of two remarkable young girls.

Gas Buggy Has Come A Long Way

THE STORY OF THE AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE. By Rudolph E. Anderson. 301 pp. Ill. $3.75.

"It was a singular thing how the horseless carriage became the rage," a trade paper, the American Automobile, said in 1899.

"At first when Mrs. Herman Oelrichs appeared in her self-moving car there was a sensation and lots of people talked unmercifully of the utter awfulness of Mrs. Oelrich's proceedings."

A few days later Miss Daisy Post got herself a horseless carriage; Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish were not long behind, and "People rapidly began falling in line . . ."

They have been in line ever since, sometimes jamming the highways almost to the point of immobility. In 50 years, writes Rudolph Anderson, Americans have purchased 89 million motor vehicles.

In a book that any man would enjoy, Anderson goes back to the anticipations of the Iliad and Old Testament Prophets Nahum and Ezekiel, to Friar Bacon and Mother Shipton to tell the story of how it all began.

There were numerous physical anticipations of the horseless carriage, too. Albrecht Durer built a circular treadmill operated by five men while Maximilian I and his empress sat in the hub.

A French "mechanician" in 1740 demonstrated a gilded red carriage powered by clocksprings that left mouths agape. It was not many years later that tinkerers were fooling around with steam powered vehicles, and Oliver Evans, "the father of the American automobile," in 1805 built a steam propelled "land carriage" that worked.

Samuel Morey in 1826 obtained a patent for a "gas or vapor engine," but it was apparently not until after the use of an internal combustion engine in a streetcar in 1888 that it was adapted for "home-made gasoline-motored automobiles."

By 1898, the Winton Motor Carriage Co. of Cleveland was advertising: "Dispense with a horse and save the expense, care and anxiety of keeping it. To run a motor carriage costs about ½ cent a mile."

Anderson's book is filled with odds and ends of motor car lore —like the discussion as to what to call the newfangled gadget, and was an automobile masculine or feminine? (The French Academy said l'automobile was masculine; the public decided it was feminine.) There are chapters, too, on the automobile on the stage and in popular music, and early jokes about it; and there is a wealth of illustrations.

Times have changed since the Winton advertisement, but "The Story of the American Automobile" will help to ease the pain.

'Orley Farm' His Best

Sense of Humor a Help In Enjoying Trollope

ORLEY FARM. By Anthony Trollope. Introduction by Henry S. Drinker. Knopf. 729 pp. $5.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE
. . . self-approving

TO BE a Trollopian, one needs only to be a literate human being. A sense of humor helps, of course. So does a taste for gentile satire, controlled pathos, seemly romance and the quiet pleasures of a well-ordered society.

But the Trollopian need not be either inordinately brilliant, or excessively erudite. If you, gentle reader, are interested in money, food, music, love, courtroom drama, village life, gossip—in short, any basic human preoccupation, activity or desire—you will enjoy the best-wearing of all the Victorian novelists.

No wonder he has become literally the most popular classic in England and one of the most popular here in America, where, incidentally, his fame has never been in such eclipse as it was for a time in his own country.

In his autobiography, Trollope says frankly that among his friends "competent to form an opinion on the subject," his novel, "Orley Farm" (herewith republished in a handsome new edition), was considered his best.

TROLLOPE himself did not go quite so far in praise of the story. He only admitted with certain self-approval that "The plot . . . is probably the best I have ever made . . . the novel is good. Sir Peregrine Orme; his grandson; Madline Stavely; Mr. Furnival; Mr. Chaffanbrass, and the commercial gentlemen, are all good. The hunting is good. The lawyer's talk is good. Mr. Moulder carves his turkey admirably, and Mr. Kantwise sells his tables and chairs with spirit. I do not know that there is a dull page in the book."

Very seldom have critics almost unanimously echoed such self-praise. Trollope was right; there isn't a dull page in the book.

The major plot line in "Orley Farm", as many tens of thousands of good Trollopians already know, has to do with the forgery or alleged forgery of a codicil to a will. Did or did not Lady Mason change the will to insure the inheritance of Orley Farm to her own son Lucius rather than letting it descend to Sir Joseph's son by an earlier marriage?

Mildly Malicious

THE appeal of this social chronicle is not principally that of a detective story. Holding a plot device over the reader from first to last might have dimmed the numerous other virtues of the story—not least of which is the magnificent character portrayal.

Trollope was at his best when picturing churchmen and lawyers, usually with some mild degree of malice not unmixed with sympathy.

In "Orley Farm," the English bar is here in all its pomp and also in all its chicanery: judges, fine old family solicitors, the barristers and trial lawyers, all deeply involved in the great trial itself —Lady Mason accused of perjury.

Most interesting, perhaps, is Chaffanbrass, that famous barrister, "small, with sharp eyes and bushy eyebrows, dirty in his attire and poor in his general appearance," but a great one for returning burglars to their loving families. He had already made his appearance in an earlier Trollope novel, "The Three Clerks" (1858). And he was to make an even more celebrated reappearance in "Phineas Redux" (1874).

A typical Trollopism is his praise for Chaffanbrass, who browbeat witnesses "greatly to their own profit, and no doubt to the advantage of society."

Honorably Beheaded

TROLLOPE, though not wealthy or even comfortably fixed until he began making some 600 pounds twice a year from his novels, was, nevertheless, a man who wrote intimately of the gentry, such as Sir Peregrine Orme and his gay young grandson and heir, who rode so well to the hounds.

The pace, as in all of Trollope's novels, is, perhaps, too leisurely for the headline-television-and-comic-book-conditioned public. The plot is rather apparent. But for those fed up with sex and savagery, Freud and Tabloidia, Cold Wars and hot scandals, here is a straight-line, well-told, beautifully-imagined Victorian novel with none of the pathos, long-winded descriptions and melodrama which marked the lesser story-tellers of that era.

THE SMALL HOURS OF THE NIGHT. By Timothy Angus Jones. Houghton, Mifflin. $2.75.

In this pleasant novel that sounds like a summer daydream, young Barnaby goes from London to Paris and becomes a member of a throneless but still rich king's court. Montmartre and the nightclubs, the entrancing smile of beautiful Princess Ekaterina—Barnaby finally foresakes it all for reasons that the reader will want to find out for himself.

CUMBERLAND AND WESTMORELAND. By Norman Nicholson. Macmillan. 259 pp. Ill. $3.00.

Cumberland and Westmoreland, two northern English counties whose natural beauties were admired by Gray and Wordsworth, among others, are described in this volume in the County Book series published in Britain. Norman Nicholson, novelist and playwright, and native of Cumberland, writes of the lakes and churches, people and even geology with infectious appreciation. A map and 49 pictures are a feature of the book.

THE DREAM OF POLIPHILO, Related and Interpreted by Linda Fierz-David. Pantheon (Bollingen Series XXV). 244 pp. Ill. $3.50.

The "Hypnerotomachia Poliphili," attributed to a Dominican monk, Francesco Colonna, was first published by Aldus at Venice in 1499. An allegorical work on several planes, it described how in a dream Poliphilo was guided by his beloved through a series of adventures in an environment described with all the richness of early Renaissance imagination. The present work is a psychological interpretation of the allegory. A number of pictures from the first edition, regarded as one of the most beautiful of the early illustrated books, are reproduced.

THE CITY OF GOD. By St. Augustine. Random House. 892 pp. $2.45.

THIS monument of early Christian theology, written at the time of the fall of Rome, is a new addition to the list of Modern Library titles. The translation is by Marcus Dods, and the introduction by Thomas Merton.

THE WEEPING AND THE LAUGHTER. By Vera Caspary. Little, Brown. 301 pp. $3.

"BUT it might have been someone else." Her mouth twisted in imitation irony. "Someone might have dissolved the pills in the Ovaltine, you know . . ." The author of "Laura" and "Bedelia" tells of the successful and beautiful woman who was found in her bedroom near death, an empty box of sleeping tablets nearby. What follows is a dreary clinical study of her life, her frustrations, her reasons for subconsciously wishing an end; and the thwarting of that desire.

Mrs. Rinehart Is Still Right On the Beam

EPISODE OF THE WANDERING KNIFE. By Mary Roberts Rinehart. 284 pp. $2.50.

DESPITE popular superstition, many women are logical. In fact it would be hard to find more logical brains in their chosen sphere than those of Dorothy Sayers, Agatha Christie and to a lesser extent Mary Roberts Rinehart.

The new Rinehart, a collection of three stories written during the past several years, is up to standard in the long title story and very nearly so in the two slightly shorter ones.

Women are murdered in all three stories, in two of them for money. Murder weapons include a hunting knife, a silk stocking used for strangulation, a milk bottle used as a bludgeon, and the usual assortment of guns.

The wandering knife story is typical Rinehart. Mrs. Shepherd, rich and unconventional dowager, goes into action when her daughter-in-law Isabel is murdered on the night of the big party for the mayor. Things look bad for Isabel's husband, Larry. It was his hunting knife.

During the course of this story the knife is hidden: in Mrs. Shepherd's stocking; in the tank of the toilet in her bathroom; in the kit of the phoney plumber; in the brown wrapping-paper package of Mrs. Armstrong, who returns it; in Judith Shepherd's jewel case, under the lily pads in the goldfish pond in the Shepherd foyer, and several other places before it is again used for murder and at last comes to the hands of the police.

A secret marriage, fight for custody of a child, and a fabulous will help to motivate this very smooth quadruple murder story.

It is interesting to note that Mrs. Rinehart is taking her own subtle revenge upon Filipino servants (remember she was attacked by her Filipino chef who went berserk?). The two other stories in this book may not be so enthusiastically reviewed in Manila.—S. N.

A Horn on the Play

OLIVER LYTTELTON, then Minister of State in Cairo, gave Winston Churchill a copy of C. S. Forester's "Captain Horatio Hornblower." At the first opportunity, Churchill wired, "I find Hornblower admirable." This caused great perturbation in the Middle East headquarters, where jittery high brass imagined that "Hornblower" was a code word for some special operation of which they had not been told. Churchill makes this amusing revelation in volume III of his war memoirs, "The Grand Alliance." . . . Meanwhile Forester's latest Hornblower book, "Mr. Midshipman Hornblower," has been issued by Little, Brown.

Book on Japan Timely

Author Points to Danger Of Ideological Conflicts

THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN, by Edwin O. Reischauer. Harvard University Press. 357 pp. $4.

CURRENT talk of a peace treaty with Japan makes Edwin O. Reischauer's able and readable book timely.

Mr. Reischauer sees the American occupation as having reached the point of diminishing returns. He wants a peace treaty fast, with or without Russia. He wants an independent Japan free to build a peaceful economy on export of heavy machinery to all other countries of the Far East and to import desperately needed food supplies.

This is a big order. But in chapters of careful examination of Japan's history, resources, psychology, economy, its recent defeat and the failures and successes of the occupation, he makes out a convincing case.

He points out the dangers to the United States if postwar Japan—its shining experiment and political proving ground—should revert to totalitarianism.

Hedges on U. S. Bases

Mr. Reischauer performs a real service in stating unequivocally that Japan cannot be both a military and an ideological ally. A democratic Japan could be a rallying point in Asia; a militaristic Japan could only drive all Asia into the Soviet camp.

When he comes to the question of American bases on Japanese soil, Mr. Reischauer hedges the application of his principle. Japan's importance as a base of operations for the defense of South Korea has changed the picture so drastically that his hedging seems like foresight.

Born in Tokyo only 40 years ago, the author has chalked up an impressive amount of experience in dealing with Japanese problems for the State and War Departments. His chapters on the psychology of the Japanese people reveal a sharp insight into the forces that have molded their culture.

The effect of historical isolation, broken by brief periods of intensive borrowing from other cultures, has been to make the Japanese "like the one child in a group which is not accustomed to playing with other children—uninhibitedly selfish, uncertain of what is expected of him or what effects his acts will have on others, and always painfully self-conscious."

Particular About Things

THE Confucian pattern of ritual and conformity has created a "particularistic" ethic. Special conduct is prescribed for specific situations—ruler in relation to ruled, husband to wife, and a maze of others. No universal ethic applies to all situations, so that when the Japanese find themselves in a strange situation, their ethic breaks down altogether. This accounts, the author says, for the brutality of Japanese soldiers during the war.

Conversely, it accounts for the inexplicable cooperation the Japanese have given the occupation. Defeat changed the situation Japan faced. The people recognized the occupation as the new authority. Their code specifies the proper conduct of ruled toward ruler. They were able to act on the basis of their ethic.

In spite of these special characteristics, Mr. Reischauer finds in postwar Japan a microcosm illustrating all the modern world's conflicts between right and left, military and civil, isolation and cooperation. His hopes for the future might be described as guarded optimism.

Yanks Win in 10th on Infield Hit, 4 to 3

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

The age of specialization now is truly upon us. Leo J. Walper, Washington and Pinehurst golf pro, is authoring a golf book dedicated to the art of the correct backswing . . . if the Red Sox win the pennant without Ted Williams, will it mean they will consider him non-essential, and trade him next winter? . . . And if Joe Louis makes a deal with the Government to take his entire purse in his come-back fight and let him wriggle off the income tax hook, couldn't you say there's a man who is really fighting for his country? . . . Fie on Stanford University which is now gloating because its crew finished third in the Marietta regatta. Stanford's crew isn't recognized by the school, the oarsmen work out on their own time, pay all of their own expenses with the help of friends and alumni . . . the baseball manufacturers who insist the ball is no livelier, make only one admission: They're using yarn of a different color, if that means anything . . . The Washington Redskins are getting a break in the announcement that they will travel to and from all games by air this season. George Preston Marshall is a confirmed nonflier, and his athletes will be subjected to none of his en route coaching . . . The N. Y. football Giants could have been more generous with Frankie Filchock of whom they merely said "he isn't included in our plans," after Bert Bell praised his deportment and lifted his three-year suspension.

POVICH

WHEN BRAZIL built the world's largest stadium in Rio de Janeiro, seating 150,000, it gave its soccer players complete protection against riotous fans by erecting a 9-foot moat around the playing field. Indignant customers have to swim it before trying to attack any athlete . . . Hialeah is boasting that it offered the best 1950 racing with exactly 25 percent of its events calling for photo-finish decisions . . . schoolboys are now more baseball minded as a result of television, and college football coaches no longer have first call on the young athletes . . . The new major league rule forbidding clubs to alter their parks after the season opens gave the Washington club a special exemption. The Nats can install special seats for opening day, and then remove them . . . Early Wynn, now the No. 2 pitcher of the Cleveland Indians, credits Mel Harder with showing him how to use the curve ball that has made him a winner. Harder did the same for Bob Feller and Bob Lemon . . . Elkridge, the 12-year-old steeplechaser which has won more than $200,000 in purses, has fallen only once in 105 races . . . Those money-making trotting tracks have one great fear: That the running tracks will also ask for night dates, and take the play away from them. It happened in the St. Louis area.

ROLAND MILES, former Cardoza High School second baseman, has been offered a contract by the Cleveland Indians . . . Middleweight Champion Jake La Motta has qualified his willingness to risk his title against Sugar Ray Robinson, the man who has licked him four out of five. Now Jake says, "The price has to be right." . . . Golf Pro Tony Penna calls Louise Suggs the greatest stylist among the women golfers, and he could have added "with or without a golf club in her hands." . . . The rule the Players Committee jammed through in those panicky days when the Mexican money men were tempting the club owners' stars protects Joe DiMaggio from more than a 25 per cent cut in his $100,000 salary next season . . . The Life of Connie Mack is now being filmed for release next spring . . . When the All-Star teams took the field in Chicago last week, the only active survivor of the original contest was Umpire Bill McGowan, who also worked behind the plate 17 years ago . . . The Nats, 95,000 behind their attendance of last season at the halfway mark, will probably finish ahead of the 1949 total, inasmuch as they were no drawing card for the final three months last year when they lost 61 of 77 games . . . the Nats, with four Cubans, three Poles, a Yugo-Slav and some Americans on their roster ought to fly the United Nations flag to the right of the Star-Spangled Banner, as MacArthur is doing in Tokyo.

THE PENNANT race betting: The Tigers became the favorites in the AL this week for the first time despite the fact they've been on top for most of a month. They are rated 8 to 5, with the Yankees second choice at 4 to 1 . . . In the National League, the league-leading Phillies are third choice at 2 to 1, behind the Cardinals and Brooklyn which are cofavorites at 8 to 5 . . . The big professional bettors took a bath on the La Motta-Mitri fight after pouring it in on Mitri at ringside and driving the odds down from 2 to 1 to even money . . . The Miami hotels will be hard hit by the crack-down investigation on bookie syndicates. The hostelries used to rent out the beach-side and pool-side book-making concessions for as much as $40,000 a season . . . The world-record times being set at the Golden Gate track in California are due to the reconstruction of the track with bouncy, silken loam made necessary by floods that put the strip under water . . . When Noor set the world record at a mile and a quarter he ran it exactly four and four-fifths seconds faster than a stake race at the same distance in New York, on the same day . . . The Tigers, with 900,000 home attendance for the first half of the season, are on the way to breaking their high mark of 1,800,000. They spend most of September in their home park.

DOUBLE PLAY AT THIRD BASE—Phil Rizzuto Yankee shortstop, is chased back to third base by Cleveland Catcher Jim Hegan (10) in the fifth inning of yesterday's game in New York. Rizzuto was trapped between third and home on Tommy Henrich's grounder. When Rizzuto broke for home, Yankee Centerfielder Cliff Mapes (extreme right) went to third. Both were out when Rizzuto stepped off the bag and was tagged by Hegan. Al Rosen, Cleveland third baseman, is on the bag with Mapes while Luke Easter, Cleveland first baseman (9), who started the play, moves in. Umpire is Charley Berry.

Easter Drops Foul Fly to Set Up Tap By Rizzuto

New York, July 15 (AP).—Little Phil Rizzuto, given a second chance, came through with a game winning single in the tenth inning today to give the New York Yankees a 4-3 decision over the Cleveland Indians.

Rizzuto beat out a bounder to shortstop Ike Boone with runners on first and third and two down. Shortly before Rizzuto's hit, he lifted a short foul ball to right which First Baseman Luke Easter dropped for an error.

Pitcher Eddie Lopat opened the winning rally with a two-out single. Gene Woodling followed with a single to center which sent Lopat to third. Al Martin went in to run for Lopat and scored the winning run.

Bob Feller opened for Cleveland and surrendered two runs in the second inning on Bobby Brown's double, Jackie Jensen's single, walk, fielders choice and wild pitch.

The Indians tied the score in the fourth on a walk, Joe Gordon's double and Jim Hegan's triple.

Cleveland moved ahead, 3-2, in the fifth on a walk, sacrifice and Al Rosen's two out single but the Yanks deadlocked the issue again in their half with Brown singling home Tommy Henrich from second.

On Nelson's Hit, 4-2

Cards Whip Phils Again; Tie for Lead

St. Louis, July 15 (AP).—A piece of strategy by Eddie Sawyer misfired today as Pinch-hitter Glenn Nelson doubled with the sacks full in the eighth, bringing in two runs and giving the St. Louis Cardinals an 8-to-6 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

It put the Redbirds on an even keel with the Phils at the top of the National League race.

With the count tied 6-6 in the last of the eighth and Cardinals holding down third and second, Sawyer and Relief Hurler Jim Konstanty decided to walk weak-hitting Del Rice, apparently to force Redbird Manager Eddie Dyer to yank Pitcher Fred Martin, his best hurler up till then in the game, or miss a chance to use a pinch-hitter.

Dyer elected to sent Nelson in. He doubled, put the Redbirds in front, and Al Brazle came to the mound in the ninth and retired the Phils without trouble.

The Phils drew first blood against Starter Max Lanier in the opening frame as Richie Ashburn and Eddie Waitkus singled and Del Ennis reached first on an intentional pass. Dick Sisler batted Ashburn and Waitkus home with another single.

The first Redbird tally came in their half of the first as Enos Slaughter flied deep to Ashburn, bringing Diering home from third.

Three runs in the third put the Birds ahead. With one out Diering and Stan Musial doubled, Slaughter sacrificed Stan to third and Red Schoendienst singled, scoring Musial. Marty Marion followed with the third two-bagger of the inning, scoring Schoendienst. That was all for Kenny Heintzelman.

Slaughter added two more to the St. Louis scores with a home run in the fifth, scoring behind Rice.

The Phils got to Lanier in the sixth for three runs on a double by Sisler, singles by Andy Seminick and Mike Goliat, a walk to Willie Jones and Bill Nicholson's doubleplay ball which scored Seminick from third.

Nats Tackle Browns Twice Here Today

The Nats are rid of the league-leading Tigers, with the help of yesterday's rain, but a new problem is moving in on them this afternoon. It is the St. Louis Browns, poised to take a one-two punch at their favorite playmates, the Washington club.

The Browns are in for a doubleheader today and though in last place and in no way resembling the Tigers, they have been finding the Nats a push-over all season. They've licked Washington in six of the eight jousts between the clubs this year.

Compounding Bucky Harris' troubles—his men scored exactly two runs in two games with the Tigers—was the clinical report yesterday from sore-thumbed Bob Kuzava, who was supposed to be ready to pitch. He isn't. His thumb's numb, he says. That line drive blow off Johnny Ostrowski's bat in batting practice last week still hurts.

Harris will start the Nats' top winner, Sid Hudson, in one of the two games against the Browns today, but he was unprepared to state who would start the other.

The Browns have been doormats for the other clubs in the league but invariably they spring to life against the Nats. They slapped Washington down three out of four on the last invasion of St. Louis, where the Nats have won only one game in five attempts. On their last trip to Washington, the Browns took three out of four.

The collapse of the Nats' batting attack is Harris' greatest worry. Eddie Yost has been hitless in his last 16 times up; Sam Mele has slumped far below the .300 mark; Irv Noren is barely hanging on to a .303 figure, and Sam Dente has dropped to .240, Al Evans to .215.

Haight Operated On, 'Doing Nicely'

Walter Haight, racing editor of The Washington Post, yesterday underwent an abdominal operation.

Doctors reported that Haight is "doing nicely." He probably will remain in the hospital for "about a week."

Griffith Now Owns 51% of Nats Stock

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

An unannounced stock transaction has given Clark Griffith absolute voting control of the Washington Baseball Club for the first time after 39 years as president of the corporation.

A "deal" with H. Gabriel Murphy, Washington insurance executive, who recently bought out the 40 percent holdings of John J. Jachym,, enabled Griffith to acquire 51 percent of the stock, which he holds with his family.

Out of the negotiations, however, Murphy emerged as the greatest individual stock holder, with the Griffith shares being split among his son, Vice President Calvin Griffith; his daughter, Mrs. Joe Haynes; his wife, and two nephews, James and Billy Robertson.

The Griffith-Murphy partnership was solidified by Murphy's transfer to Griffith of "several hundred" of the 7851 shares of stock he bought from Jachym three weeks ago for an estimated purchase of $620,000.

A consideration in the deal was Griffith's agreement to extend to Murphy first option on the Griffith stock for a period of years, with the provision that Murphy meet the best offer if Griffith chose to sell.

In return, Murphy gave Griffith a similar cross-option on the Murphy holdings for the same period of years, thus fortifying themselves against "hostile" buyers.

Murphy yesterday refused to comment on the new set-up. "It is Mr. Griffith's province to make any announcements," he said. "I am happy to be associated with him, proud to be a director and honored to be an officer of the club. My large investment manifests my faith in Mr. Griffith."

Murphy reiterated that he was not "fronting" for any other interests. "I represent only myself," he declared.

Griffith and his original partner, the late William Richardson, each acquired 40 percent of the club's stock in the winter of 1911, but a few years ago Griffith added to his holdings. However, when Jachym bought the Richardson interests, Griffith held only 42 percent of the shares, and held control only through proxies given him by his friends among the balance-of-power stockholders.

With the invasion by Jachym, Griffith was able to acquire more shares, but at no time did the actual holdings of himself and his heirs total more than 45 percent. He needed only a few hundred shares of the Murphy stock, however, to give him 51 percent voting control.

Since his purchase of the Jachym stock, Murphy has been made a director of the club and elected to the newly created office of second vice president. At the annual stockholders' meeting in January, it is believed that he will succeed to the $10,000 a year post now held by Treasurer Wooten Young.

Bums' Homers Rout Cubs, 13-5

Chicago, July 15 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers went on a home run binge today, banging five out of the lot to swamp the Chicago Cubs, 13-5.

Roy Campanella and Carl Furillo socked two homers apiece and Duke Snider one. Campanella and Snider now have hit 18 home runs to their credit and Furillo nine.

The heavy blasting enabled big Don Newcombe to post his first victory since June 17. Newcombe gave up nine hits including a three-run homer in the sixth inning to Bill Serena.

Loser Weeper Wins Butler Via a Foul

New York, July 15 (U.P.).—Mrs. Evelyn L. Hopkins' Three Rings smashed the track record in the $50,000 Butler Handicap at Jamaica today, but the winner's share of the rich purse went to Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Loser Weeper through a disqualification.

After taking the lead at the start, Three Rings set a furious pace the rest of the way but all to no avail. Jockey Eric Guerin's claim that Three Rings drifted in front of Loser Weeper at the sixteenth pole was substantiated by motion pictures of the race.

The numbers came down off the infield board and Three Rings, who clipped one-fifth of a second off the 1:55-1/5 record set in the same stake by Lucky Draw in 1946, was placed last. This moved Royal Governor up to second place behind Loser Weeper with Piet third and Murano fourth.

The crowd of 32,423 which made Murano a 3-to-1 favorite and Three Rings a strong second choice, greeted the announcement with boos. But Loser Weeper still picked up a purse worth $40,000, boosting his lifetime earnings to $231,420.

Guerin, who had Loser Weeper in fourth place for the first mile of the mile and three-sixteenths stakes, made a strong bid in the final drive. He felt his horse was bothered enough to claim a foul and he reported that fact to the patrol judge as soon as he pulled the horse up.

Loser Weeper, winner of the Edward Burke, Valley Forge, Dixie and Suburban Handicaps, paid $12.60, $6.80 and $6.20, while Royal Governor returned $10.80 and $7.20, and Piet $6.60.

Chisox Clout Bosox, 7 to 3

Boston, July 15 (AP).—Switch-hitting Dave Philley, batting right-handed, stroked a pair of consecutive homers for four runs today while pacing the Chicago White Sox to a 7-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Starting Lou Kretlow, the Chisox spotted the Red Sox three runs in the first inning, on two bases on balls, Clyde Vollmer's double and Junior Stephens' single.

Howie Judson then took over the Chicago mound but was replaced by Randy Gumpert, who limited the Bosox to one hit over the last six innings to gain credit for the pitching decision.

Greek Song Races From 9th Place, Wins Classic by Nose

Chicago, July 15 (AP).—Greek Song, a chestnut colt owned by Donald T. Ross, Wilmington, Del., charged from ninth place to win the $77,275 Arlington Classic by a nose today in possibly the most thrilling finish in the history of the race.

Under a masterful ride by Jockey Ovie Scurlock, Greek Song closed with a tremendous stretch drive to conquer Alfred G. Vanderbilt's small but courageous filly, Bed O'Roses, only filly in the 10-horse field.

Your Host, winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Derby, and a badly beaten favorite in the Kentucky Derby, finished third, a length back of the leaders.

Fourth place went to Clifford Mooers' Hawley. Oil Capitol, 8-5 favorite, lumbered in sixth.

A crowd of 26,052 witnessed the thrilling finish.

Greek Song earned $58,950 for his stirring triumph, which gave him two stakes victories in succession. He recently scored in the $40,000 Dwyer Stakes at Aqueduct. He now becomes a factor in the scramble for the 3-year-old championship of the year.

His owner is president of Delaware Park and also president of the Thorobred Racing Associations.

The chestnut son of Heliopolis-Sylvan, by Royal Mistrel, covered the mile and a quarter in 2:01 4/5.

Expertly handled by Scurlock, Greek Song was held off the blistering early pace set by William Peavey's Wisconsin Boy and Your Host, which raced head and head until the stretch turn. Then Your Host went into the lead momentarily.

The winner returned $10.80, $6.00 and $4.20. Bed O'Roses paid $7.80 to place and $5.60 to show. The show price on Your Host was $4.40.

At the finish, Hawley, in fourth place, was eight lengths back of Your Host.

Then came H. P. Headley's Lotowhite, Tom Gray's disappointing Oil Capitol, Hasty House Farm's Lot O Luck, Wisconsin Boy, Sam E. Wilson, jr.'s Air Mail, and Reverie Knoll Farms' French Admiral.

Greek Song was back in ninth place after six furlongs. He moved up to sixth at the mile, and then

Kiner Clouts Righthanders For 21 Homers

By Ralph Roden

NEW YORK, July 15 (AP).—The majority of major league baseball's top home run hitters are making the "percentage" players look sad.

Take Ralph Kiner, the National League's top producer of home runs for instance. Including games of Thursday, the Pittsburgh slugger had hit 24 round trippers. Kiner, who swings righthanded, socked 21 off righthanded pitching with Ralph Branca and Rex Barney of Brooklyn and Willie Ramsdell of Cincinnati his pet victims. Each gave up two.

Brooklyn pitching has been especially sweet to Kiner. The Pirate mauler has belted seven homers against the Dodgers. Next to Brooklyn Kiner likes the St. Louis brand of pitching. He has whaled five against Cardinal hurling.

Kiner drove in 45 runs on his homers. Only 10 came with the bases empty. He has banged 14 at home and 10 on the road.

Willie Jones of the Philadelphia Phils who was tied for second place in the National with Duke Snider of Brooklyn and Hank Sauer of Chicago at 17 homers apiece, also has hit more homers against the type of pitching he's not supposed to.

JONES, a righthander slugger, has belted 14 against righthanders. Like Kiner, Jones feasts on Brooklyn pitching. He socked six against the Dodgers. The Phil third sacker has driven in 32 runs on his seat smashers and has cracked 10 in his own Shibe Park and the other seven away.

Sauer, the righthanded hitting left fielder of the Cubs, also has hit more homers against righthanded pitching than southpaws but not by a wide margin. Sauer has cracked out nine against the righthanders. Sauer's pet club is Pittsburgh. He has unloaded five against Billy Meyer's crew.

Ted Williams, injured Boston Red Sox star, who was tied with Cleveland's Al Rosen for the American League lead at 25 each, also lives up to the "percentage."

THE lefthanded clubbing Williams socked 21 of his homers off righthanded pitching. Ted has socked five homers against three teams, the Athletics, Browns and Tigers. The Boston strong boy has driven in 4c runs on his jolts and has slammed 16 in his own Fenway Park.

Rosen, on the other hand is going against the book. The righthanded hitting Indian thirdsacker has whacked 18 out of the lot against righthanders with Conrad Marrero of Washington the chief contributor. Rose has banged four off Marrero's slants.

Red Sox sluggers Vern Stephens and Walt Dropo, tied for second on Thursday at 19 each, also are running against form. Both are righthanded batters. Dropo has hit 10 of his blows against righthanders. Stephens has banged out 13.

Kluszewski Paces Reds With 3 Hits

Cincinnati, July 15 (AP).—The surging Cincinnati Reds today climbed to within four games of fifth place in the National League as they drubbed the Boston Braves, 9 to 4, to take their three-game series, two to one.

The Reds now have won 16 of their last 23 games.

Cincinnati wrapped up today's game in the first three innings as they routed Bob Chipman with a three-run outburst in the opening frame and four more tallies in the third.

Leading the Reds' attack again was Ted Kluszewski who clipped the Braves' pitchers for three hits in five times up and batted in another run. Kluszewski got 10 hits in 14 times at bat in the series with Boston.

Willard Ramsdell, starting Cincinnati pitcher, lasted until the ninth when the Braves got their final run and Manager Luke Sewell decided to call for hurling help.

The Reds clubbed four Boston pitchers for 17 hits.

Chipman's trouble all started with his own error. In the opening inning Connie Ryan singled with one out. Johnny Wryostek hit back to Chipman for what looked like a sure double play but the Brave hurler threw the ball away and the Reds were off and running.

Fowler Drops 3-Hitter to Browns, 3-2

Philadelphia, July 15 (AP).—The St. Louis Browns, held to three hits by Dick Fowler, resorted to home runs to take a 3-2 10-inning victory over the Philadelphia Athletics today. The defeat dropped the A's to the American League cellar.

Tom Upton's first home run of his major league career in the top of the tenth broke up a pitching duel between Fowler and Ned Garver.

The Browns came from behind in the sixth when Catcher Sherman Lollar walked and Roy Sievers hit his sixth homer of the season.

Singles by Wally Moses, Elmer Valo and Sam Chapman in the sixth deadlocked the game at 2 all.

The A's had five double plays and St. Louis three. The bursitis-stricken Fowler finished his first game of the year, walking eight.

Becroft Tennis Winner

Tacoma, Wash., July 15 (AP).—Peter Becroft, University of California at Los Angeles graduate student from New Zealand, won the men's singles championship of the 59th annual Pacific Northwest tennis tournament here today. He defeated Jim Head of Santa Barbara, 6—3, 3—6, 8—6, 5—7, 6—3, in the finals.

'For Sale' Sign Down?

Connie, Two Sons, Reported Trying for All of A's Stock

Philadelphia, July 15 (AP).—That "for sale" sign on the Philadelphia Athletics may be pulled down with Connie Mack entrenched more firmly than ever as head of the team he has directed for a half-century.

The 87-year-old manager and chief stockholder, in the fading days of a career that has brought him nine American League championships and five World Series wins, recently announced the club is for sale if the price is right.

Immediately, several syndicates indicated interest. The chief one is headed by James P. Clark, president of the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League.

But now there is a possibility Mack will join Earle and Roy, eldest of his three sons, and purchase the holdings of the other stockholders. It is reported they have been attempting to raise the necessary cash through Philadelphia banks.

It is believed it'll take at least $1,500,000 to purchase the stock held by Connie Mack, jr., and the heirs of John and Benjamin Shibe. Connie, jr., is the youngest of Mack's three sons and a half-brother of Earle and Roy. His mother is Connie's second wife.

Young Connie, head of the club's concession department and member of the board of directors, is willing to sell his 12 percent. So are the Shibe interests, who hold 42 percent.

Benjamin MacFarland, grandson of Mack's former partner Benjamin Shibe, is the club's traveling secretary. He generally is considered the spokesman for the Shibe interests and is a member of the board.

Some years ago, Mack gave each of his three sons 12 percent of his stock and retained 22 percent for himself. Roy is vice president of the club. Earle until a recent shakeup, was assistant manager, now is chief scout.

The Shibe holdings are divided among seven descendants of Benjamin Shibe, who supplied the money when the American League club was placed in Philadelphia by the circuit's founder, Ban Johnson.

The club stands to lose plenty of money this year even though the receipts from all sources, except the lucrative concessions, figure to be around $800,000. The club's budget was based on probable attendance of 800,000. The team doesn't figure now to draw more than 400,000 at home.

On that basis the home receipts should be in the neighborhood of $409,000.

The Athletics also received 10 cents on each admission to Phillies games at Shibe Park. The Phillies, in the running for the National League pennant, look like a cinch to draw 1,250,000. That's another $125,000.

Colonial Loop Folds; Video, Radio Blamed

New Haven, Conn., July 15 (AP).—The Colonial League, a Class B circuit operating in New York and Connecticut, today became the first minor league to fold in 1950.

Beset by bad weather and television and radio broadcasts from nearby big-league cities, the loop has been fighting for its existence since its inception in 1947.

During the less-than-four years it operated, the Colonial League has undergone many changes with various cities coming in and dropping out.

Waterbury, Torrington and Bridgeport dropped out last night. Bristol sold most of its club today, leaving only Poughkeepsie and Kingston.

"In The Soup"

President John A. Scalzi, jr., declaring the league was "in the soup," summoned franchise holders to meet at Stamford tomorrow for a final session.

It managed to finish the past three campaigns even though none of the members ever admitted making a dime. The decision to operate in 1950 came only after a last minute scramble.

The final crack-up began Thursday when Waterbury's players went on a strike. The athletes refused to board a bus to Kingston unless allowed to remain there overnight. They were slated to play again last night in Kingston.

Management fined the players $100 each. Yesterday, when the players offered to call off the strike, Club President Joseph Lombardi called off the fines, paid the team up to June 12 and said "so long."

Torrington's withdrawal preceded similar action by Brideport last night.

This Is It

General Manager John Gentile stepped before Torrington's public address system and simply said: "This is the last home game for the Torrington Braves."

Club President Carl F. Brunetto of Bridgeport explained: We've lost over $75,000 during the four years we have been in the Colonial League, and we find it impossible to continue. Bad weather, radio and television broadcasts of major league games hurt us."

Clark Taylor Shares In 3 Tennis Titles

Crawford Notch, N. H., July 15 (AP). — Clark Taylor of Hamden, Conn., today triumphed in all three of the New Hampshire State final tennis matches.

He won the singles by defeating Allen Fleming of West Orange, N. J., 6—1, 6—2, 8—6. Then he teamed with Nicholas Sharry of Worcester, Mass., for a men's doubles triumph, and, finally, with Mrs. H. P. Farrington of Danbury, Conn., for mixed doubles victory.

Werle's 2-Hitter Tops Giants, 2-1

Pittsburgh, July 15 (AP).—Lefty Bill Werle outpitched All-Star game hero Larry Jansen today with a brilliant two hitter as the Pittsburgh Pirates edged the New York Giants, 2-1.

Monte Irvin singled in the fourth inning for the Giants' first hit and Tookie Gilbert doubled to left and scored the lone New York run in the sixth for the other.

Gilbert advanced to third on a fly ball and registered when outfielder Gus Bell threw wild attempting to head him off.

Danny Murtaugh clubbed his second homer of the season in the second inning for Pittsburgh's initial run. Ralph Kiner drove in the winning run with a fly ball in the third.

Second Baseman Ed Stanky and Manager Leo Durocher of the Giants were tossed out of the game in the first inning by Umpire Dusty Boggess. Stanky was heaved out for disputing a called strike and Durocher for continuing the argument after Stanky was banished.

Hobrow Gets His Fish on 3d Trip Out

By Ralph Murdock

MEYER HOBROW is one of our local anglers who doesn't take "no" for an answer. He takes his fishing reverses with renewed determination. A fishing trip out of Solomon's Island several weeks ago with 18 of his salesmen from the Crusty Pie Co., aboard produced 'nary' a single fish. Not to be subdued, Mayer arranged for another outing from Chesapeake Beach. Only 15 of his faithfuls would take the chance.

Murdock

This outing proved to be a proverbial flop, too—the fish again treated Hobrow's party with silent contempt—not even a single nibble. Under ordinary conditions, the average fisherman would have called it "quits." But not Meyer.

While telling his tale of woe to local Attorney Arvin Lynn, he not only received some legal advice (on fishing) but ended up by being an invited guest on a fishing trip to Rehoboth Beach, Del. The defeated Hobrow was willing to try just once more. Other anglers on the trip were Attorney Joe Francke and Fred Smithwick.

After an eight-mile trip from Lewes, Del. the four anchored off the shipwrecks. The porgies started biting right away much to the delight of Hobrow. Meyer puts it this way, "In 3½ hours we nailed 337 porgies (average two pounds), two black bass and five blues. There were 112 boats working on 'em and they all caught fish." Salesmanager Hobrow concludes with this, "We were catching as many as three on a line (using three hooks). How come?"

FROM THIS same area comes this report—881 porgies and 12 trout. The skipper was Capt. Harry M. Parsons who pilots the "Thelma Dale." The anglers were George E. Klein, 909 Larch ave., Takoma Park, Md.; Jack Casselbury, 152 13th st. se.; J. C. Stogdale, 6205 Pontiac st., Berwyn, Md.; Albert Klein, 21 W. Longfellow st., Alexandria, Va.; George Jones, 1622 N. Pierce st., Arlington, Va.; John Viynoo, 2003 Chillum rd., Avondale, Md.; and J. W. Roberts, 5111 Cathedral ave. nw.

Irvin Rich, co-owner of the Shoreham Drug Co. who has a summer home at Shady Side, Md., hooked up with his 5-year-old son, Norman, in a head-to-head struggle on the pier of Richie's Roost. Oddly enough, junior hung it on his dad—the score, 6-1. The fish were all sunperch—not enough for a meal but a moral victory for the 5-year-old.

D. C. Marine Tops in Shoot

Ashville, N. C., July 15 (AP).—United States Marine Corps experts took top honors as individuals and as a team in the North Carolina pistol championship match which began here today.

Capt. John Jagoda, Washington, D. C., fired 858 of a possible 900. T/Sergt. W. L. Devine of Parris Island, S. C., fired 857 and Capt. Thurman Barrier fired 855.

The Marine team, composed of Barrier, Jagoda, Devine and Corp. George Hurst, scored 1132 points of a possible 1200 to win the team match. The second place team, composed of Virginia State Police members R. G. Eakin, M. S. Eurick, F. L. Woolf and M. H. Hunt, scored 1092 of a possible 1200 points.

Corp. John Laws of the North Carolina highway patrol, was high-scoring expert with 830 points, Woolf, with 823 points, scored high in sharpshooters class and J. S. Howell, North Carolina State highway patrol, scored high in the marksman class with 776 points.

Matches tomorrow will be fired with .22-caliber weapons. Today's matches were limited to .32-caliber and larger pistols.

Sizzling 63 Puts Them At 9 Plus

Toledo, Ohio, July 15 (AP).—Slamming Sammy Snead and Jim Ferrier, a pair of former PGA champions, swung into the lead in the $15,000 Inverness best-ball matches today as they turned in two victories to construct a plus-nine score, three ahead of the nearest foe.

The West Virginian and the Australian ripped eight strokes off par with a scintillating 63 this afternoon to hand defending Champions Chick Harbert and Bob Hamilton a five-down defeat and send the 1949 winners crashing into last place.

It was really a six-down defeat until the officials allowed a protest filed by Harbert and Hamilton.

On the second hole, which was halved in par fours, Snead missed a putt, picked up his ball and threw it at the hole. The ball ripped part of the turf from the edge of the hole and Harbert and Hamilton charged that Ferrier mended the break with his putter before making his putt.

Sam Mad, Throws Ball

Hamilton and Harbert protested that Ferrier forfeited the hole because he had "improved" his chances of making the putt. Officials allowed the protest and awarded the hole to Harbert and Hamilton.

In the morning round, Snead and Ferrier finished two up over Jimmy Demaret and Jack Burke, the combined wins wresting the lead from Porky Oliver a Dutch Harrison. The latter pair jumped to a plus-six rating with a one-up victory over Henry Ransom and Skip Alexander, and a two-up conquest of Clayton Heafner and Johnny Palmer.

Two matches Sunday wind up the tourney.

Snead almost single-handed plunged his pair out front as he scored eight birdies in the afternoon round to smother Harbert and Hamilton. Five of his birds came on a six-hole stretch on the back nine.

Te 16 professionals, paired in eight twosomes scored 101 birdies and four eagles in today's 36-hole jaunt, Freddie Hawkins getting two of the eagles. On the twelfth hole in the morning round, he put his second shot 6 inches from the cup, the two shots eating up 516 yards, and this afternoon he canned a 35-yard pitch shot for a 3 on the 492-yard dogleg ninth. Demaret and Harrison got the others.

Haas, Hawkins, Third

Haas and Hawkins, boasting a pair of 1-up victories and three even-stephen matches in five starts, hold third place with a plus two rating, one ahead of Mangrum and Middlecoff. The latter duo, although down in fourth place, has played the best golf of the first five rounds. They have scored 37 birdies, two more than the Snead-Ferrier and Haas-Hawkins twosomes, and in the under-par department for 90 holes are leading with 34.

Indications were that the championship—and the $4000 top prize—would hinge on the outcome of the Harrison-Oliver vs. Snead-Ferrier match, booked in Sunday's final round.

Under the Inverness scoring system a team gets a plus for each hole it finishes ahead of a rival, and the loser a minus, so Harrison-Oliver could pass the leaders with a two-up victory if their relative position is unchanged by the morning matches.

For the 90 holes played in the five 18-hole rounds, the eight pairs are under par like this:

Mangrum-Middlecoff 34; Snead-Ferrier 33, Harrison-Oliver 32, Haas-Hawkins 32, Harbert-Hamilton 28, Demaret-Burke 27, Haefner-Palmer 26 and Ransom-Alexander 20.

Snead leads the individual birdie parade with 22, one ahead of Harrison.

Facts and figures: Four-ball matches.

FOURTH ROUND RESULTS (PAR 71)

Fred Haas-Fred Hawkins (62), 1 up over Chick Harbert-Bob Hamilton (63).

Lloyd Mangrum-Cary Middlecoff (65), even with Clayton Heafner-Johnny Palmer (64).

Dutch Harrison-Porky Oliver (66), 2 up over Henry Ransom-Skip Alexander (68).

Sam Snead-Jim Ferrier (65), 2 up over Jimmy Demaret-Jack Burke (67).

FIFTH ROUND RESULTS

Harrison-Oliver (63), 1 up over Heafner-Palmer (65).

Ransom-Alexander (68), 1 up over Mangrum-Middlecoff (66).

Demaret-Burke (65), even with Haas-Hawkins (64).

Snead-Ferrier (62), 5 up over Harbert-Hamilton (69).

THE STANDINGS

Snead-Ferrier, plus 9; Harrison-Oliver, plus 6; Haas-Hawkins, plus 3; Mangrum-Middlecoff, plus 1. Heafner-Palmer, minus 2; Ransom-Alexander, minus 3; Demaret-Burke, minus 6; Harbert-Hamilton, minus 7.

Manassas Has Charity Game

A charity baseball game for the benefit of the Arlington Hospital between the Old Dominion League All-Stars and the Quantico Marines will be played August 11 at Manassas, George Churchill, publicity director of the league, said yesterday.

Willis, Vail Pace Field In Regatta

Cambridge, Md., July 15 (AP).—Chauncey Willis and Dinky Vail finished one-two in the second race today in a bitter battle for top honors in the Cambridge Yacht Club's annual Admiral Byrd series for Hampton One-designs.

The two Norfolk, Va., veteran skippers reached the two-third mark of the three-race series with Vail leading Willis in total points, 41¼—40¼.

Sailing his brother's Rebel II, Vail won the first race today while Willis finished third in his Long Gone.

Rebel II, owned by Jack Vail, has captured the series for the last three years, with Jack at the tiller in 1947-48 and Dinky handling her in the 1949 edition. Willis won the inaugural in 1946.

Sonny Smith, of Annapolis, Md., was third in total points after today's races. He steered his Uh-Oh to fourth place in the earlier event and finished fifth in the afterpiece.

A strong southeast wind prevailed as the 21 boats plied a four-mile course over the Choptank River.

The final race of the series will be sailed tomorrow.

Yaleman Sets Another Mark

Hamilton, Ont., July 15 (AP).—Vic Frank, 23-year-old Yale graduate, cracked the Canadian open discus record today with a heave of 164 feet 2½ inches.

It was his second record of the two-day Canadian senior track and field championships.

His distance was nearly eight feet better than the Canadian open mark of 156 feet 4½ inches set by Sam Felton of New York in 1947.

The bespectacled athlete who intends to practice law next year, established his first Canadian mark Friday with a distance of 50 feet 11 inches in the shot put.

'Celebs' of Congress Line Up for Tourney

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

GOLF FANS who have watched national figures in action in the National Celebrities tournament, can get another glimpse of some big names at the "Professional-Congressional" tournament at East Potomac, July 26.

At least seven Senators have given Marie Geneau, in charge of arranging pairings, their assurance that they'll be on hand, another 8 or 10 are expected to accept bids, and at least two dozen Congressmen will be on hand.

Senators J. W. Fulbright (D., Ark.), Harry P. Cain, (R., Wash.), Styles Bridges (R., N. H.), Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), George Malone (R., Nev.), Theodore Green (D., R. I.) and Virgil Chapman (D., Ky.) have definitely accepted.

Majority Leader Scott Lucas, who considers it a bad day when he doesn't break 80, is trying to arrange his speaking schedule so that he can be present, and handsome George Smathers, the Senator-to-be from Florida, is expected.

The tournament will star at 4:30 p. m. Admission is free and the public is cordially invited to be on hand to watch the Congressmen and local pros compete for the Congressional Cup and $500 in prizes.

THE ENTRY OF George Fazio, Woodmont Country Club's high ranking tournament pro, in the Maryland Open which begins Tuesday at the Columbia Country Club, makes him a heavy favorite to topple the crown from the head of Charley Bassler, Baltimore Country Club pro who bears a striking resemblance to movie actor Ray Milland.

Washington also has three strong contenders for high amateur in the tourney what with Ralph Bogart and Bobby Brownell of Chevy Chase and Mike Jankowski of Prince Georges competing.

That attractive new fence near the first tee at the Fairfax Country club will inclose an 18-hole putting course. Be ready in about a week, Greenskeeper Bill Glover says.

The best time to tee off at the Fairfax layout, extremely popular with the 75 to 90 shooters, is about 1:30 p. m. to 2:00 on week days. Most of the rush is over by then.

Joe Haskins set a record for the fewest number of putts on Fort Dupont's nine-hole layout. Joe used only 11 putts.

Bobby Brownell of Chevy Chase as District Amateur champ, will captain a team of District all-stars who clash with a team from the Virginia links at Manor Country Club August 13. The District champ and one member from each of the 15 member clubs will compose the 16 man team to represent the District. Last year the locals came off on top in a match played at the Farmington Country Club in Charlotesville.

Hole-in-one: Lew Spangler on the fifth at Rock Creek. The distance was 165 yards. He used a five iron and was playing with Pro Bill Crabb and Bill and Bob Leapley.

A PRINCE GEORGES innovation, a full-time baby-sitting service while golf-minded parents play, has proved successful and will become permanent. The brain child of Manager Walt Bogley, the plan went into operation the first week in June.

A small two-room cottage with a fenced-in playground with a lady in attendance from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. has attracted from 10 to 15 youngsters daily. On weekends the number is higher and special arrangements are made for parties and evening affairs.

Courthouse Country Club in Fairfax has a new pro-manager. He's Jim Small, a golfing Scotsman who comes from a long line of linksmen. He came from Rockland Country Club, Parkhill, N. Y., where he was a pro-manager. His brother, Bill, is also a golf pro at Fisher's Island, N. Y.

Wolfe and Bolster got to the quarterfinals of the national last year.

At the membership meeting in connection with the Middle Atlantic PGA's pro-am at Columbia tomorrow, Middle Atlantic President Al Houghton will formally receive the Tom Utterback Trophy on behalf of the organization. A replica of the trophy will be presented annually to the winner of the Middle Atlantic tournament.

Lightning Halts Glick, Bower Finale

Baltimore, July 15 (AP).—Lightning in the middle of a steady downpour today caused postponement of the Glick-Bower championship match in the Maryland State Golf Association's women's tournament.

Mrs. Maurice Glick of Baltimore and Mrs. Albert B. Bower of Washington both had reached the ninth green when play was halted. Mrs. Glick led 2-up after taking the first, sixth and seventh holes and losing the third.

Heavy rains had turned the Suburban Club course into a swamp as the two finalists, both former champions, played the first eight holes this morning.

As Mrs. Bower lined up her first putt on the ninth, a bolt struck the course. Everyone agreed that was enough for the time being. It was decided to resume play tomorrow from the point of interruption.

Bailey Outstanding CYO Ball Player

Jimmy Bailey of Holy Comforter has been voted the outstanding player in the Catholic Youth Organization Junior Baseball League, it was announced yesterday. Jack Neubauer of Annunciation was voted the best player in the CYO's intermediate league.

At Columbia

Brownell, Gallagher Gain Finals

Walter Gallagher of the host club and Bobby Brownell of Chevy Chase won their way into the finals of Columbia Country Club's annual member-guest tournament yesterday with a 3 and 2 victory over E. J. Hackey and Bob Morris of Prince Georges.

Don West of Columbia and Maj. B. K. Yount of Army-Navy won the other finalist berth, defeating favored Page Cornwell and Jack Barr of Chevy Chase, 3 and 2.

Gallagher and Brownell shot a best-ball 67, three-under-par, in a steady rain. The match was even at the end of seven holes, then Brownell won the eighth with a par, and Gallagher the tenth with a birdie.

Morris birdied the tenth with a 14-foot putt to cut the margin to one up. Eleven and twelve were halved, then Gallagher birdied the par-three thirteenth.

Brownell closed out the match on the fifteenth with a birdie.

Dark horses West and Yount lost only one hole to Cornwell and Barr—the fifth. That evened up the match. West and Yount had won the third with a par.

The match was even until the twelfth when West and Yount took three straight holes with a birdie and two pars.

Barr birdied the 140-yard sixteenth but Major Yount closed out the match with another on the next shot. Both sank putts of about 15 feet after their tee shots landed on the green.

FIRST FLIGHT CONSOLATION

Peter Nee and Ralph Bogart (Chevy Chase) defeated M. B. Swanson and Bob Chandler (Prince Georges), 4 and 3. Bill Shea and Tom Wheeler (Congressional) beat R. S. Foster and O. H. Foster, Jr. (Army-Navy), 1 up.

SECOND FLIGHT

Don Buckingham and Don Deveau (Chevy Chase) defeated T. E. Edmonston and Bob Harmon (Argyle), 3 and 1. A. G. Dendorff and Fleming Bomar (Congressional) beat Bob Tiffee and Cliff Kohman (Indian Spring), 3 and 2.

Pep-Bell Fight Rescheduled for Monday, July 24

Bridegroom Willie Pep, who doubled as the world's featherweight boxing champion, has resumed training in Hartford, Conn., for his scheduled 10-round nontitle bout with Bobby Bell, rescheduled for Griffith Stadium a week from tomorrow night, July 24.

A week ago Pep created a furore when he got married in Elkton, Md., on the day he was to box Bell here. He was suspended by both the District of Columbia Boxing Commission and National Boxing Association for failure to appear here and the fight subsequently rescheduled.

"Willie's sorry for the way he's upset things, and wants to clear himself with Washington fans," Manager Lou Viscusi assured Promoter Goldie Ahearn yesterday.

Vanderbilt, His Trainer Sit In On Wrong Race

New York, July 15 (AP).—Maybe Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and his trainer, Bill Winfrey, should have "stood in New York."

The wealthy sportsman and his trainer had Bed O'Roses in today's Arlington Classic at Chicago and Loser Weeper in the Butler Handicap on the Empire City-at-Jamaica program. They passed up the Butler, leaving Loser Weeper to be saddled by Moody Jolley.

Bed O'Roses finished second to Greek Song in the Classic. Had Vanderbilt and Winfrey remained here, they'd have seen Loser Weeper account for The Butler, thanks to the disqualification of Three Rings.

It wasn't too bad a day for the Vanderbilt stable, at that. Loser Weeper earned $40,700 and Bed O'Roses picked up $10,000 for her second.

Tourney Postponed

The D. C. Recreation Department tennis tournament, scheduled to open yesterday, has been postponed until this Saturday.

Par 4's Are Tough

National Amateur Course Is Played by Duffer; He Has 101

By George Moses

Minneapolis, July 15 (AP).—How tough is the Minneapolis Golf Club course, where the National Amateur will be played August 21-26?

In the interests of realistic reporting, I played it the other day to find out.

My medal for 18 holes, 101, reflects thorough coverage of the course. It also reflects a thoroughly honest count.

I sliced a few tee shots to check conditions in the right rough, and hooked a few more to do the same on the left. I also checked into a few sand traps.

On the fifteenth hole, I held back on my drive to the point where I can report the terrain just behind the ladies' tee is no fit spot from which to play your second.

I found par impossible to equal but on the other hand, stayed within double bogies until weakening visibly on the last few holes.

My companion, Club President Vern Evans, nosed me out with a 78.

Seriously, the course offers a fine test of golfing talents less limited than mine.

It is a moderately hilly, moderately wooded course with two water holes. It is being lengthened slightly over 100 yards, to 6660 for the amateur. Par is being cut on the first nine from 36 to 35. The second nine is par 36.

Large, medium - sloping greens are trapped to the point where pin placement can and probably will frequently make par a desirable figure. Fairways are of average width, with well-trapped roughs on both sides.

"The character of our course lies in its par 4 holes," says Evans, whose course is playing host to its first national meet. Minneapolis Golf Club had the Western Amateur in 1940.

There are seven par 4 holes of over 400 yards. None is a cinch.

They Play Champion Eagles

Redskin Karras, Minnesota End, Round Out College Stars

Chicago, July 15 (AP).—The 1950 College All-Star football squad was completed today with the acceptance of bids from Lou Karras, Purdue tackle, and Gordon Soltau, Minnesota end. Karras is property of the Redskins.

A 50-man aggregation has been named to meet the Philadelphia Eagles, National football league champions, in the seventeenth annual classic August 11 in Soldier Field.

Karras, a 230-pound Gary, Ind., product, was an expert offensive blocker with the Boilermakers. Soltau fielded 12 passes for 150 yards in winning his fourth varsity letter at Minnesota. The 195-pound Duluth, Minn., wingman, also is an able kicker.

Players from 33 colleges and universities are on the list of this year's squad which will seek to avenge a 38-0 shutout by the Eagles in last summer's game.

Notre Dame has the most representatives, with six graduating seniors. Oklahoma will send four, and Minnesota and College of the Pacific, each, will send three.

The All-Stars, coached by Dr. Eddie Anderson of Holy Cross, will train at St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wisc. The Eagles, under Coach Earle (Greasy) Neale, will work out at Grand Rapids, Minn.

AT CHARLES TOWN

DEAR FOLKS:

Well, the Charles Town meeting came to a close Saturday. It was highly successful—in mutuel play and attendance. It all goes to prove if you give the fans the right kind of racing they will storm the doors like they did closing day. Carle Johnson, one of the official family here is headed for North Randell where he will work as a placing judge. Myron Davis who has proven a very capable Steward will embark for New York, while Fred Burton the racing secretary will go to Wheeling. The veteran John Turner, sr., is scheduled for a little trip to Monmouth Park to visit his son John and then heads for Wheeling where he was chosen as a steward this year. See you on the rail.—Bill.

Palumbo's Fears Prove Groundless

Charles Town, W. Va., July 15.—Reliable, old Rough Ordy who carries the cerise and blue silks of J. T. Gibson, added another purse to her long string when she galloped off with the A. S. Allen Memorial closing day feature here today.

The seven-year-old mare, however, fooled the cagey old veteran Sammy Palumbo who was astride the daughter of Swash Buckler. During the post parade, the reinsmen detected some soreness in the mare and trotted back to the saddling enclosure to seek the aid of the Track Veterinarian, Dr. W. E. Trussell.

After working Rough Ordy up and down the track, the veterinarian informed Palumbo the mare was all right.

If Rough Ordy was sore — she didn't show it during the running, as she bounded to the front at the start and made every pole a winning one. J. Nechamkin's Ellen's Pick closed strongly down the homestretch to take the place by several lengths from E. L. Morsberger's Minaddie. Rough Ordy ruled the favorite when she paid only $5.20 while she stepped the mile and one sixteenth in 1:50.

A gathering estimated at 7000 came out for the final program at the Charles Town Jockey club's 13-day summer session. Wagering hit around the $300,000 mark for the eight events.

The daily double combination which consisted of sprightly and Dazzle Dust returned the tidy sum of $54.20. Sprightly ridden by Jockey F. D. Rivera won the opener returning $11.40 while Dazzle Dust took down the second race with Apprentice Doyle Gardner at $6.80 for $2.

Greek Song's Stretch Drive Captures Arlington Classic

turned on the power going into the stretch. He moved up to third, two lengths behind Bed O'Roses which had moved to within a head of the leader, Your Host.

Bed O'Roses, champion filly of 1949, was ridden by Nick Combest, who took her into the lead as they straightened out for home. There, Your Host, with Johnny Gilbert he began to fade, so far as Bed O'Roses and Greek Song were concerned.

They both swept by the California star, Bed O'Roses on top by a length and a quarter at the eighth pole.

She was still in front by a narrow margin at the 16th pole, and driving hard as she neared the finish line. Greek Song got up in the last few strides and finished with more left than the little filly.

Greek Song's time for the race was the third best performance in the records of the event. Omaha, the winner in 1935, and Shut Out, in 1942, were clocked in 2:01 2/5. But Why Not, winner in 1947, did it in Greek Song's time.

Porter's Broom, owned by the Chicago restaurateur, Ray Ankenbauer, accounted for the supporting attraction, the $4000 Whopper Purse.

Porter's Broom beat Calumet farm's great filly to lead by half a length. Fred W. Hooper's Ocean Drive was third and Ponder, the other half of the Calumet entry, finished fourth in a six-horse field.

Ponder, winner of the Classic last year, as well as the Kentucky Derby, was flying at the finish. Porter's Broom led all the way in the six-furlong dash and was timed in 1:09 4/5, only three fifths of a second slower than the track record. The winner paid $12.40 and $3.20.

The Calumet entry returned $2.20. There was no show betting.

Californians Clark, Shea Reach Mid-Atlantic Tennis Finals

Jim Brink, Sid Schwartz Eliminated

By Gordon Beard

Two Californians, Straight Clark of Pasadena and Gil Shea of Los Angeles, advanced to the final round of the men's singles in the Middle Atlantic tennis championships at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club yesterday, and will meet today for the title.

Clark, seeded sixth, completed the rout of the four top-seeded netmen by eliminating second-seeded Jim Brink, Seattle, Wash., 7—5, 6—3. The first, third, and fourth rankers were ousted in the quarterfinals.

Sidney Schwartz, seventh-seeded player from Brooklyn, N. Y., who upset No. 1 Earl Cochell Thursday, was defeated by eighth-ranked Shea, 5—7, 6—3, 6—3.

A Good Man at Net

Clark's victory was achieved at the net, where he angled shots that Brink could not retrieve. Close-in shots which Clark pounded into the net prevented him from making the match a runaway.

Brink led only twice, at 1—0 and 2—1 in the second set, as Clark played a forcing game all the way. Service was broken seven times in the opening set, Clark winning by holding his own serve the last two times.

An all-around, sound court game enabled Shea to come from behind and defeat Schwartz. The winner retrieved his opponent's potent drop shot consistently, rushed the net almost at will, and passed Schwartz whenever he attempted to close in.

Rurac Takes It Easy

The semifinal matches in the women's division went to the two top-seeded players. First-ranked Magda Rurac of Los Angeles, defending champion, had little more than a workout as she downed Virginia Boyer, Fairfax, Va., 6-0, 6-1.

Second-seeded Baba Lewis, Boston, Mass., downed Washington's Ann Gray, third-seeded, 6—1, 6—1, and will face Magda for the crown today.

In the only doubles match, first-seeded Cochell, San Francisco, Calif. and Hugh Stewart, Los Angeles, won over Hal Burrows, Charlottesville, Va., and Alphonso Smith, Washington, 6—0, 6—4.

The matches were delayed three hours by heavy morning rains and ended prematurely in another downpour.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS

Men's singles (semifinals)—Straight Clark, Pasadena, Calif., defeated Jim Brink, Seattle, Wash., 7—5, 6—3; Gil Shea Los Angeles, Calif., defeated Sidney Schwartz, Brooklyn, N. Y., 5—7, 6—3, 6—3.

Women's singles (semifinals)—Magda Rurac, Los Angeles, Calif., defeated Virginia Boyer, Fairfax, Va., 6—0; 6—1; Baba Lewis, Boston, Mass., defeated Ann Gray, Washington 6—1 6—1.

Art Larsen, Mulloy Play For Title

By Rip Watson

Spring Lake, N. J., July 15 (AP).—Gardnar Mulloy and Art Larsen gained the final round of the forty-second annual Spring Lake tennis tournament today with victories over Dick Savitt and Eddie Moylan.

Mulloy, of Coral Gables, Fla., whipped Savitt, of Orange, N. J., 6-4, 6-3, 6-4, in a crisp, hard hitting duel, while Larsen, of San Leandro, Calif., outlasted Moylan, of Trenton, N. J., in a dull match, 7-5, 3-6, 8-6, 6-3.

They will meet for the championship tomorrow afternoon.

Nearly every game of the Larsen-Moylan match, which lasted two and one-half hours, went to deuce. The games were marked by long, spiritless rallies in which both players appeared content just to return the opponent's shot.

Service breaks were frequent throughout the match, and neither man could win on his own service in the first six games of the match.

Moylan Rallies

Down 1-3 in the second set, Moylan started to force the play, going to the net whenever possible. He blasted his way through five straight games and won the first two games of the third set before Larsen could slow him down. Leading 6-5 on his own service, Moylan lost the crucial game and also the next two.

Larsen then won the match by breaking Moylan's serve in the fourth game of the fourth set and building up a 5-2 lead.

The 36-year-old star was too accurate as well as too smart for Savitt, Eastern Intercollegiate champion from Cornell. Mulloy's sharply angled placements, beautiful net play and all-around generalship more than made up for Savitt's slight superiority at the baselines.

Mulloy, ranked fifth nationally and seeded No. 1, trailed only three times in the match, and each time Savitt's lead was short lived. Mulloy quickly moved ahead whenever he turned on the power of his overhead game.

Press Club Tennis Today

The National Press Club tennis tournament, headed by Secretary of the Army Frank Pace and defending champion C. Alphonso Smith, gets under way today.

Smith, seeded number one, is former national junior champion and is president of the Washington Tennis Association. Sites of the first-round matches will be chosen by the participants. The finals will be played at Kenwood Country Club.

Aussies Take Cup Matches From Canada

Montreal, July 15 (AP). — Australia's Davis Cup tennis team today clinched victory over Canada in their North American zone best-of-five series, winning the doubles match in straight sets following yesterday's two singles triumphs.

Young Frank Sedgman and Veteran John Bromwich defeated Henri Rochon and George Robinson, 6—2, 6—4, 6—4. Tomorrow's two singles matches thus become mere exhibitions.

A crowd estimated at 3000 jammed the Mount Royal Tennis Club to see the Australians give a classical exhibition of teamwork featured by sure-stroking volleys and smashes at the net.

Australia now will advance against Mexico for the North American zone title.

Sedgman, a 22-year-old husky blonde, was as convincing in his performance today as he was yesterday when he downed Brendan Macken in three straight sets in singles play.

It was the powerful overhead smashes of Bromwich, combined with his beautiful placements, that really told the story against the Canadians.

At times, Bromwich seemed to be playing with the Canadians as he only lobbed the ball back, although he had plenty of chances to execute his powerful smashes.

Publicists Kick Off Football Season

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

FOOTBALL SEASON doesn't officially begin for about 10 more weeks, but the publicity boys are already in midseason season form. Yesterday's mail, for instance, included Princeton's 1950 squad roster, complete with the starting offensive and defensive teams although the Tigers don't launch practice until September 1 . . . The Redskins, who make the season seem closer at hand by starting practice tomorrow at Los Angeles, checked in with their brochure and press-radio guide. Ditto the Baltimore Colts, who have either finally used up all their All-America Conference stationery or thrown it away and supplanted it with the name of the National Football League, their new affiliate . . . Johnny Cox, Navy's high-scoring drum-beater, came through with a neat folder containing the Middies' schedule, ticket information and a quote already from Coach Eddie Erdelatz about 1950 prospects: "We will have a scrappy outfit with lots of spirit" . . . Dick Turner, the man behind the typewriter at Virginia, checked in with an announcement that the Cavaliers are planning to expand Scott Stadium to 33,098 seats for the resumption of relations with William & Mary (November 11) and the North Carolina game (December 2) . . . Catholic University chose July 15 to announce its schedule . . . North Carolina's Jake Wade, with no Charlie Justice to write about any longer, notifies all parties that Coach Carl Snavely will appear as a guest actor in "The Lost Colony" at Manteo, N. C., July 18. Not to be outdone, Duke's Ted Mann sends word that his coach, Wallace Wade, will be on the same bill . . . One of the few not heard from yesterday was Maryland's Jim Tatum. "He's away practicing worrying," explained the Terps' George Carroll . . .

ERDELATZ

PROMOTER GOLDIE AHEARN, however, managed to crack through the football iron curtain, wiring in another of his sparkling quotes, a warning to those who think Bobby Bell will be a push-over for Willie Pep next week. "Don't undersell Bell short," messaged Ahearn, who'll stage the bout barring another unexpected wedding by one of the principals . . . Charlie Justice, Don Hutson, Ossie Solem and Jim Tatum are the first football casualties of the Korean war. The Army has canceled the junket which would have taken them to Germany on a football-speaking trip. With the military situation being what it is, none objected . . . To Chandler Harper, of Portsmouth, Va., new PGA king, goes the honor of receiving the first invitation to the 1951 National Celebrities Golf Tournament . . . Other prominent golfers who were "firsts" were Bobby Jones, Byron Nelson, Sam Snead and Ben Hogan . . . Red Auerbach, who coaches basketball in the winter and worries about basketball in the spring, is spending his summer vacation by coaching an all-star team in upstate New York . . . The Touchdown Club may get together with the Variety Club and co-sponsor an exhibition between the Redskins and Bears in 1951. They'd like to stage it in Maryland's new stadium . . . The nickname of Rogello Martinez, the Nats' newest Cuban pitcher is "Limonar," which means lemon in Spanish . . . Manager Bucky Harris hopes he won't live up to it . . . Although he fractured his skull sliding, Gil Coan now wears a protective cap when batting . . . Five of the new players the Redskins have drafted have every qualification for another draft—military. They are single and between the ages of 22 and 24. They are halfbacks George Thomas, Eddie LeBaron, and Hall Haynes; Tackles Lou Karas and Al Houghton . . .

Mother of 3 In Finals of Middle States

Philadelphia, July 15 (AP).—Top seeded Mrs. William S. Rawls of Philadelphia Cricket Club advanced to the finals of the women's Middle States tennis tournament with a 6-3, 6-3 victory over Jane Austin of Cynwyd, Pa.

Second seeded Rhoda Joan Hopkins, 21-year-old member of West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, N. Y., also entered the finals with a 6-0, 10-8 win over Mrs. Pearl Barandon, 95-pound Haddonfield, N. J., ace.

Mrs. Rawls, mother of three small sons and twice winner of the title, and Miss Hopkins play tomorrow for the title.

Joy Valderrama, Temple University coed, won the right to meet Sue Peterson of Cynwyd in the final of the consolation round.

Miss Valderrama defeated Betty Taylor of Haddonfield, 6-1, 8-10, 6-2.

Colts Take 70 To Training

Baltimore, July 15 (AP).—The Baltimore Colts of the National Football league announced today the signing of ten players, bringing the number under contract to date to 70.

Thirty-one members of the squad will open the Colts training at Western Maryland College Monday.

The new signees are Fullback Ralph Ruthstrom, a holdover; Quarterback Gene Malinowski, former Detroit Lions player; Halfback Tony Campagna, former Washington Redskin and Pittsburgh Steeler, and Bill Boller, Kentucky University.

Ends Ed Phelps, non-collegian of Beltsville, Md., and Steve Charsky, St. Bonaventure; Tackles Earl Schaub, West Liberty (W. Va.) Teachers; Jim Williams, West Virginia University; Bob Todd, Louisville University, and Len Modzelesky, Scranton University.

There Were No Fish, So Anglers Lasso a Deer

Weymouth, Mass., July 15 (UP). Striper fishing on the Fore River wasn't so good today but the deer were running.

Joseph Pelufo of Quincy and John Nisbet of North Weymouth interrupted their fishing to land a 100-pound yearling from the motorboat.

They said they saw the deer swimming down the river and failed in an attempt to chase it ashore. Then they lassooed it and hauled it in.

The deer was exhausted but otherwise unhurt.

Binghamton, N. Y., July 15 (AP).—Mike Dudik of Endicott, N. Y. sank a 20-foot putt on the thirty-seventh hole today to win the New York State amateur golf championship.

It Begins Tomorrow

Schroeder Tries Comeback In National Clay Courts Event

Chicago, July 15 (AP).—A new men's champion is certain in the national clay courts tennis meet which opens a week-long stand at the Suburban River Forest Tennis Club Monday.

And it may be the comeback-assaying Ted Schroeder, who last year lost his No. 1 rating to Pancho Gonzales, now a professional and last year's clay court winner. Schroeder did not compete here in 1949.

Schroeder, from La Crescenta, Calif., still has trouble deciding between tournament tennis and his refrigeration and air-conditioning business—not to mention the lure of professional tennis which, thus far, he has given the cold shoulder.

Schroeder will come here from the western tourney at Cincinnati, along with such other clay court contenders as Billy Talbert of New York and Tony Trabert of Cincinnati.

Schroeder's top River Forest competition is expected from Talbert, Art Larson of San Leandro, Calif., who played this week in the Spring Lake, N. J., meet; Sam Match of Los Angeles, Herb Flam of Beverly Hills, Calif.; Jim Brink of Seattle and Tony Mottram of Britain, who heads several foreign entries.

The other foreign entries are Ricardo Balbiers of Chile and Felicissimo Ampon of the Philippines. Balbiers, a student at Rollins College (Fla.) was runnerup to Flam of UCLA, in the recent national intercollegiate tourney.

Flam's doubles partner in winning national collegiate honors, Glen Bassett of Los Angeles, also will represent the younger set, as will Hamilton Richards of Baton Rouge, La., national prep titlist at 16, and George Richards of Los Angeles.

Miche Triumphs In Coast 'Cap

Inglewood, Calif., July 15 (AP).—Miche, a game little gray horse from the Argentine, captured the ninth renewal of the $25,000 Inglewood Handicap today before the largest weekend crowd of the current Hollywood Park meeting.

A throng of 41,880 fans watched the 5-year-old Latin, one of the exclusive "I Beat Citation Club," take command of the mile and an eighth feature in the stretch and win by two and one-quarter lengths over Dharan, the longshot of the field of six candidates.

Frank Frankel's Frankly, whom the crowd in rather surprising fashion installed as the favorite, came in third.

Entire Bone May Be Removed

Ted Williams May Undergo Second Operation on Arm

Cambridge, Mass., July 15 (AP).—Ted Williams wants to get back in the Red Sox lineup this season in time to knock in 17 more runs and hit the 100 mark—but doctors say the odds are against his getting the opportunity.

Propped up in a hospital bed, with his left arm nearly covered by a plaster cast, the American League slugger said today he may have to undergo a second operation on the elbow he fractured in the All-Star bame in Chicago.

In such an event, said Dr. Joseph Shortell, the entire radius bone in the injured member would have to be removed. Ted took a gloomy view of this but the surgeon assured him it need not be handicap and that he would be as good as ever after sufficient rest.

Meanwhile, Baseball Commissioner Albert B. Chandler telegraphed General Manager Joe Cronin that Ted could return to his leftfield duties whenever he is ready. He will not be placed on the disabled list. Chandler said inasmuch as the injury was suffered in the charity All-Star game he would do the same thing in the case of any club so affected.

"I hope to play within five or six weeks," said Ted as he posed for the first pictures taken of him since he entered Sancta Maria Hospital. "But I'm going to take no chances, I'm going to follow orders."

Although he said he was in constant pain and under sedatives most of the time, Williams managed to joke a bit with the nuns and nurses that are attending him.

He thinks the Red Sox still have a chance in the pennant fight without his services. "They can win without me," he declared.

Stitches will be removed from the elbow early next week and then Williams can go home. Subsequent therapy treatment may tell how long he will be out and whether further surgery is required.

FTC Accuses Fur Chain of False Claims

Edward Goldstein Enterprises, Inc., operator of retail stores in New York, Washington, Baltimore and Upper Darby, Pa., was accused by the Federal Trade Commission yesterday of misrepresenting prices and falsely claiming that its Washington store was quitting business.

Brentley's, Inc., a subsidiary, was named also in the complaint which the commission made public. Addresses of both the parent firm and the subsidiary were given as 315 7th ave., New York.

The commission said that Goldstein Enterprises' Washington store has been operated under the name of Brentley's, Inc., and Brentley-Edwards at 425 7th st. nw. It listed the company's other retail stores as Dranow's, Inc., Baltimore; Dranow's of Upper Darby, Inc., and Ben Dranow Furs, Inc., of New York.

The complaint said the respondents represented, in connection with going out of business sales, that the store known as Brentley's, Inc., was selling its stock at a discount of 50 percent or more from regular prices. Actually, the complaint added, the store did not go out of business, and there were not the price reductions advertised.

The complaint said also that coupons purportedly sent only to selected persons, supposedly entitling them to price reductions of $20 to $50 on coats and other garments, were actually mailed to all persons listed in the telephone directories of the cities where the stores are situated. Furthermore, the complaint said, the offer did not involve any actual savings as compared with regular prices.

Corporate officers named in the complaint are Edward Goldstein, president, and Benjamin M. Dranow, secretary-treasurer. Neither could be reached for comment.

The complaint charged violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. It scheduled a first hearing in Washington on September 7 before Trial Examiner John W. Addison.

Iran Rejects Red Charges In New Note

Tehran, Iran, July 15 (U.P.).—The Iranian government today repudiated Russian charges that "an abnormal situation incompatible with good neighborly relations" existed along the Russo-Iranian border.

The rejection came in a four-point reply to the third Soviet protest of this year over American air surveys in the area.

The note assured the Soviets that surveys near the borders would be topographical and would be carried out by Iranian nationals only.

At the same time Premier Gen. Ali Razmara denied a report that he had called Russia a "threat to Iran." His denial was published in the local press and broadcast by the official radio.

An official source said the Iranian note was delayed by the fall of the last government. He said it was redrafted three times toning down its original stiff wording.

The reply said, however, that matters referred to in the Soviet note was Iran's internal affair and "it is not necessary to mention the fact that the imperial government of Iran has complete freedom in any point of its own territory."

Dawn Revolt In Ecuador Ends Quickly

Guayaquil, Ecuador, July 15 (U.P.).—Nine rebel leaders and a score of policemen and civilians were arrested today as loyal troops bloodlessly put down a dawn revolutionary outbreak which for a few hours held vital buildings and installations in the city.

Led by Carlos Guevara Moreno, a former Interior Minister, the revolt erupted at 5 a. m. in this chief seaport of Ecuador. Acting quickly, the rebels seized the State Governor's palace, the airport, the Simon Bolivar military base and the telephone office.

Loyal forces, evidently forewarned by Guevara's months-long press and speaking campaign, reacted as quickly and by 10 a. m. had arrested Guevara and his lieutenants, recaptured seized installations and restored order.

In Quito, the capital, the government said the outbreak was confined to Guayaquil and that the rest of Ecuador was quiet.

President Galo Plaza told a special meeting of his three-day-old cabinet that the situation was completely under control and that arrested rebel leaders were en route to the capital by air to be tried.

A mechanized army unit was sent from Quito to Guayaquil to reinforce the garrison as a precaution against further coups. Defense Minister Manuel Diaz Granados flew to Guayaquil.

Plaza, in a special message to the army, praised the loyalty of the Guayaquil units "which deserves the unanimous backing and gratitude of all Ecuadoreans."

Arrested with Guevara were Rafael Coello Serrano, Rafael Dillon Valdez, Leopoldo Amador Navarro, Enrique Jairala, Onias Pacheco and Fernando Ocejo. Two police captains identified only as Jacome and Holguin, assigned to the airport, and a few civil guards and civilians also were arrested.

NAACP Backs Negro Lawyer In U. of Va. Tiff

Richmond, Va., July 15 (AP).—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People today pledged its support to a Negro lawyer if he seeks to fight the University of Virginia's refusal to admit him.

The university's board of visitors yesterday rejected the admission application of the lawyer, Gregory Swanson, of Danville, who sought to do graduate work in the law school.

Dr. J. M. Hinsley, of Richmond, State NAACP president, termed the board's action "very undemocratic" and said that "we will back Swanson if he tries to get in."

The board was at sharp variance with the opinon of Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., who expressed "grave doubt" as to whether Virginia law on school segregation would apply to graduate schools such as those at the University of Virginia. The members were also aware that recent U. S. Supreme Court decisions have forced Oklahoma and Texas to admit Negro students to institutions of higher learning.

The Negro attorney said today in Martinsville where he now practices law, that he still has not decided whether he will take legal steps to secure admission, but he added that he "welcomed" the NAACP offer of support.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 16, 1950

Nobody Has Time to Write Songs About the Potomac

By Norma Lanum

SOME rivers get themselves sung about in songs—the Wabash, the Danube, the S'wanee.

But some, like our own Potomac, are famous without benefit of lyrics. Maybe it's because folks who love the Capital's waterway are too busy canoeing through the silvery upstream waters, or fishing in one of the shady inlets jagging the river line from Great Falls to Mount Vernon.

While many river cities exploit their waterways for industry and power, our Potomac remains virtually untouched—a playground for Washington folk of all ages.

Come summertime, there's no pleasure dome in the area to compare with the blue dome of sky arched over its verdant banks. Social life in winter Washington may center in stately embassy drawing rooms and in brightly lighted ballrooms of fashionable hotels. But midsummer social life moves out of doors, and much of it is lived on or beside the water.

Here, Congressmen and newsboys, Government girls and fashionable matrons, share the wealth of sport and scenery. Nobody shows a membership card, nobody hangs out a "reserved" or a "standing room only" sign.

Although there are no hit songs lauding the Potomac, there are plenty of music lovers on its shores. Watergate concerts, the musicians playing from a modernized showboat behind the Lincoln Memorial, draw crowds of Washington society throughout the season.

Restaurants scattered along the waterfront are also big social drawing cards. Most of them have terraces and porches lifting their patrons right over the river. For those who want to get even closer to nature, the Potomac's terraces provide endless picnic sites, especially on the Virginia side. On a fair Sunday the banks invariably are lined with picnic spreads, playpens, badminton, soft ball and croquet gear.

And it's not an uncommon sight to see an art class lined up, easel to easel, along the river, painting and sketching favorite scenes. It might be a rocky wooded cliff rising a hundred feet out of the river near Chain Bridge, the small fleet of the Maine ave. docks, the stone fortress at Fort Washington or the green terraces rolling from Mount Vernon down to the water's edge.

The artists would have a song to sing about the Potomac, too, if they weren't so occupied recording its beauties in their sketchbooks.

But it's folks like Mr. and Mrs. George Crosby who are really likely to warble a melody or two in honor of the Potomac River.

The Crosbys make their home on the river in their immaculate little yatch, the Nixie. And it wasn't the housing shortage or high apartment rentals that drove them to the river. They're just natural-born sportsmen—with the emphasis on hunting and fishing—and nothing less than living on the water all year around, satisfies their yen for the great outdoors.

There are a few other families whose attachment to the waterfront keeps them in a boat all the time. And there's really no explaining the attraction. "The closer you get to the water the better it is. And living on the river, well there's just nothing like it." That's how Mr. Crosby puts it.

Oldtimers on Embassy Row Remember

'Yes, Very Like His Father'

By Marie McNair

WASHINGTON, some 40-odd years ago, was in the same giddy whirl that it is today. Secretary of State John Hay and his successor Elihu Root, "both belonged to a minute intellectual aristocracy of a country of businessmen." Pan Americanism was being espoused by the United States, and the man largely responsible for the Brazilian-American friendship which exists today was Joaquim Nabuco, first Brazilian Ambassador to the United States.

This I gleaned from a little more than cursory glance at Carolina Nabuco's biography of her father, "The Life of Joaquim Nabuco," published recently in English.

Miss Nabuco, sister of the present Brazilian Ambassador, Mauricio Nabuco, has put much time and thought into her book. She's edited sheaves of old letters written by her father from Washington to his family at home. She had the help of Ronald Hilton who translated her work from Portuguese to English, and the collaboration of Lee B. Valentine, Frances Coughlin and Joaquin Duarte, jr., all instructors in Hispanic American studies at Stanford University.

In the telling of the story of a great national figure the political history of Brazil unfolds. A wise man, a gentle and kind person, Joaquim Nabuco was descended from the Portuguese nobility. Yet he took up the cause of emancipation for slaves in his country, saw it through to the end.

At his embassy in Washington, Nabuco did a lot of entertaining, for he knew that the social influences of foreign houses could be great. He maintained a sort of open house, treated the staff members as an extension of his family.

For him, giving dinners, both large and small, was a favorite form of entertainment. He did not enjoy large receptions, the prevalent form of festivity today. But he believed a dinner with friends was the most pleasant way to end the day. Moreover, a small dinner was useful for untangling tangled relations; a large dinner added a personal touch to the official homage which inspired it.

Carolina and her brother Mauricio, were teen-agers then. They left Washington with their father's body 40 years ago, bound for home. They were to return together 38 years later—the Ambassador accompanied by his sister and hostess. And the few to be found who still remember Joaquim Nabuco, are apt to say "Yes, the Ambassador is very like his father."

Took a Long Time to Get Back

IT TOOK Jerome Phillips Uhl, the artist, 61 years to get back to Washington. But he finally made it, found a studio at 1334 Wisconsin ave. and is already dug in.

Years of living in European capitals, painting, and singing operatic roles, have left bright memories for this distinguished artist which fade in comparison to the nostalgic twinges which he has felt since his return. He remembers letting his birds loose from the top of the Washington Monument when a child. Many of the old landmarks which he left have since disappeared and his search for old friends has brought scant results.

Mr. Uhl is the son of another famous artist, the late S. Jerome Uhl, who had the distinction of painting eight Presidents of the United States of America. In Rouen, France, there is a statue of Jerome Uhl as a little boy executed by the great Rodin.

Among the well known personages who have sat for Mr. Uhl are the late Irvin Cobb, Lawrence Tibbett, Mary Pickford and the late David Warfield.

The man who probably has interviewed more famous people in this country than any other is Hungarian born Bela Kornitzer. Not only does he make personal visits to the biggest "names" in the United States but he follows through to interview their sons —sometimes famous in their own right.

Bela is serious about what the effect of his projected book "Fathers and Sons" might have on the Communist world. He wants to show that in many cases the great men of this age have sprung from humble origin, that in America they have the opportunity to become great by their own efforts.

When Bela interviewed Bernard Baruch, the statesman pointed to portraits of his father, the late Dr. Simon Baruch; of Woodrow Wilson and Winston Churchill, and said: "The three greatest men I have ever known."

Hans Albert Einstein, son of the noted scientist and a civil engineer at the University of California, says of his father: "When I have some scientific problem it is a very comfortable feeling that I can write to father and he promptly straightens me out."

Former Postmaster General James A. Farley's father was a bricklayer at Grassy Point on the Hudson. Former Secretary of State Cordell Hull lived in a log cabin in Pickett County, Tenn., Bela Kornitzer learned, and his father "never wore more than five dollars worth of clothes at a time," to quote his distinguished son.

Chief Justice Fred Vinson, the Roosevelt boys, John Coolidge and President Truman himself have contributed to the book, which the author hopes to bring out before long.

SUMMERTIME is tennis time! All along Washington's tennis courts you will find the younger set dressed in cool, comfortable white shirts and shorts ready for an exhilarating match.

It's loads of fun and a good exercise to boot, they'll tell you. Another point with which tennis enthusiasts will be in complete agreement is shoe comfort. Mrs. Richard B. Daley and Miss Bettyjane MacKenzie take time out to tie shoe laces just right

As if tennis weren't strenuous enough, Miss Rose Antoinette Caudle and Thomas C. Seiler give leap frog a try between sets. Other less "eager" players prefer to conserve their energies and relax with a ta' cool drink between sets.

But whether it's leap frog c a nice comfortable chair after a match, almost any nice day of the week you will find Washington's younger set enjoying the sun and perfecting their strokes at the local courts. These pictures were taken at th Wardman Park Hotel.

Miss Margaret Ann Benedict of Washington, and Lieut. Wilbur Henry Vinson, jr., USA, were married Saturday, July 8, at Fort McPherson, Ga. A reception at the Officers Club followed the ceremony. The bride is the daughter of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Jay L. Benedict, and her husband is the son of Col. and Mrs. Wilbur H. Vinson, USA.

The bride was graduated from Holton Arms School and Vassar College and she received a Master of Arts degree from Duke University this year. Her father, General Benedict, now retired, was formerly superintendent of the United States Military Academy.

Lieut. Vinson was graduated from the United States Military Academy with the class of 1945. He has been on duty at Fort Benning, where Miss Benedict was visiting, when his sudden orders for Japan arrived and hastened the wedding.

After a brief wedding trip to the Cloisters at Sea Island, the bridegroom flew from Washington Thursday for the West. Mrs. Vinson will remain with her parents in Washington during her husband's absence overseas.

Knight—Cork

Miss Virginia Lee Cork and Malcolm Francis Knight were married on Friday, June 30, at St. Matthew's Cathedral, the Rev. Louis W. Quinn officiating. Mrs. Knight is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Walter Cork of South Carolina, and Saint Clair Shores, Mich., and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Knight of Milton, Mass.

Given in marriage by her brother, Robert L. Cork, the bride wore a period gown of ivory wallpaper taffeta, with fitted bodice and off-the-shoulder neckline. Her fingertip veil of illusion lace was arranged with a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a spray of gardenias.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was given at Hotel 2400. Upon their return from a wedding trip in the Poconos, the couple will reside at the Park Tower Apartments.

The bride was educated in South Carolina schools, was graduated from Erskine College and is at present with the Department of State. Mr. Knight was graduated from Columbus University School of Law.

Virginian Talks on Plant Arrangement

By Virginia Cullen

REHOBOTH BEACH, DEL., July 15.—Here at Rehoboth Beach where plants and blossoms abound on woodland streets and the balsam-scented air from pines growing to the water's edge gives the town a unique place among seacoast resorts, cottage owners are delving into their midsummer hobby of flower arrangement and gardening.

Naturally, the Rehoboth Art League has decided to include these activities in its seasonal curriculum of art studies. This week a class in flower arrangement and gardening was opened in the Corkran Studio, with an Arlington woman, Mrs. Ernest G. Baldwin, lecturing while members of the Sussex Gardeners Club demonstrated with arrangements using flowers and green plants now abundant in their gardens. Mrs. David Marine of Rehoboth and Mrs. Leslie G. Knapp, represented the Gardeners Club, and a Lewes Beach artist, Miss Laura Cowell, criticized the lines and colors from an artist's standpoint.

The classes will be held each Wednesday morning between 10 o'clock and noon, and will run for seven weeks with commentaries by persons outstanding in that field. Among them will be Prof. R. F. Meahl of the horticultural department of Pennsylvania State College, who will lecture next Wednesday on annuals, perennials and flowering shrubs.

Mrs. E. Granville Munson of Washington, who is now at her summer home here, was hostess on Sunday at tea in the Corkran studio when guests had a first viewing of two new exhibitions, hung on Saturday, to replace the annual members' show that opened the Art League's 1950 season of exhibitions. Approximately 32 water color paintings are being shown by Howard S. Schroeder, a member of the Art League faculty, who is teaching adult classes now. In the old Paynter House wing, converted into a studio from an ancient eighteenth century farmhouse, Clarence C. Platt, well-known portrait painter, is exhibiting oils and water color sketches.

'International Tea'

AS this time of the season finds the resort filled with many families from the Washington embassies, an "international tea" is being planned for July 23 to welcome all foreign language-speaking visitors. Mrs. W. Wallace Chiswell of Washington will be hostess at the tea.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel V. Anderson and two children of Washington's Diplomatic Corps, are visiting at Rehoboth with Mrs. Anderson's mother, Mrs. J. E. Grubb, at her cottage on Wilmington ave. Mr. Anderson, a foreign service officer, has been assigned to Lisbon as first secretary and consul. Before going to Washington to attend the 1949-50 academic session of the National War College, he was first secretary and consul at Havana, Cuba. They will remain at Rehoboth through July when they will sail from New York for Portugal.

Miss Conchito Delgardo, and her brother, Arthur, son and daughter of Judge Francisco Delgardo of Washington, have been visiting Col. and Mrs. Osgood C. McIntyre at the Fort Miles family quarters in Lewes. Judge Delgardo represents the Philippine Islands on the War Damage Commission. Colonel McIntyre, now commanding officer of the Harbor Defense Post at Cape Henlopen, once served with Judge Delgardo in the Philippines. Before the latter returned to the Far East he and Mrs. Delgardo and their children were entertained here at a cocktail party at the Ocean House on Lewes Beach.

Additions to Art Tour

MR. AND MRS. M. G. de QUEVEDO, who are at their summer home at the Indian Beach Washington colony, are new additions to the Cottage Art Tour scheduled for July 21 and 22. Other Washingtonians who have offered this week their cottages for the tour are Mr. and Mrs. Herbert M. Bingham, Mrs. Francis Winslow, and the interesting "Gum House" on Henlopen ave. that was restored from an old colonial farmhouse of lower Sussex County by the William D. Sterretts, former Washingtonians. There will be more than 20 resort homes displaying the works of well-known artists appropriately hung in a home setting.

At the Belhaven Hotel, Senor and Senor Jose A. Mora of the Uruguay Embassy, arrived Saturday for a stay of several days.

Other weekenders from Washington at the Belhaven were Miss Elizabeth J. Poch, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Farrell, jr., and Miss Isabel Pyle.

Miss Virginia E. Hughes and Miss Dorothy J. Straub, both of Washington, were at the same hotel this week.

A Rehoboth Beach woman, author of a best seller cook book, is being flooded with mail from housewives all over the country asking for some of her recipes mentioned recently in a magazine article by the food expert, Clementine Paddleford. Mrs. Sheldon F. Potter, (Margaret Yardley Potter) wrote her book on the culinary arts while she and her husband, a Philadelphia attorney, were building their home, Little Wiser, in Henlopen Acres. Miss Paddleford visited recently with the Potters here and was intrigued with their menu of fried turkey, prepared after the manner of fried chicken, but from 2-pound turkeys.

Mr. and Mrs. Alan S. Walls of Sudlersville, Md., have arrived at their summer home here after a 10,000-mile motor trip through the West, that included visits in British Columbia and Mexico.

Summer Camping

SCIONS of many Washington families are enrolled for the first camping period of Camp Arrowhead on Rehoboth Bay, operated by Col. Ralph I. Sasse, a former football coach at the United States Military Academy. The season opened recently. Youngsters from the Capital enjoying all types of water sports, riding, and the study of crafts are:

Jimmy Cavanaugh, son of Dr. James S. Cavenaugh; Herman and Jimmy, sons of the Congressman from Pennsylvania, H. P. Eberharter; Wells Hardesty, son of D. W. Hardesty of Arlington; Joe Jaap, son of Commander Joseph Jaap, United States Navy; Kenneth and Richard Lee, sons of an official of a Chinese steamship line; Thomas Otto, son of Col. Thomas Otto of the United States Air Force; Stewart Paull, son of Glen H. Paull; Robert Simmers, son of Commander C. R. Simmers, United States Navy, and Vlado Zunjevic, son of Hugo Zunjevic of the Yugoslavian Embassy.

Orval Hopkins of The Washington Post staff, arrived last Saturday with his wife and three children, and they are settled for a month at the Griswold cottage at 124 Henlopen ave.

Commander Chauncey M. Murray of Fairfield, Conn., United States Navy, ret., has leased for the season a cottage on Henlopen ave.

French Have a Way With Style

CHRISTIAN DIOR makes dramatic use of furs for fall

JACQUES FATH, designing for Joseph Halpert, puts a slightly French, slightly wicked air into even his simplest daytime dress. The billowing scarf panel accentuates slim hips

By Peggy Preston

New York, N. Y., July 15.—Not all American women will be able to wear French clothes. But there isn't one among us who wouldn't willingly tear out her hair trying—if she but had the price.

That, in effect, is the feeling you have when you look at the American-made collections of two top Paris designers, Jacques Fath and Christian Dior. You feel it, as well, if to a lesser extent, when sighing over the more Americanized clothes of such French former patriots as Lilly Dache and Pauline Trigere.

Because, whether you like to admit it or not, the French have a certain way of dealing with feminine dress. Even when they are conforming to the demands of the American market, as they are doing more and more lately, they have a way of making clothes that look naughty, but nice.

It is a recipe that is difficult to emulate. Primarily it concerns the curve of a seam, the angle of a panel, the subtle setting of an overdrape or peplum. When it is all added up it makes for a slightly wicked silhouette that fascinates Americans.

Here in New York this week, we've viewed the American-made collections of the great champion, Dior, and the "bad boy" of Paris fashion, Fath. Both collections are completely separate and apart from their Paris collection which will be unveiled in that city next month. They are geared to American tastes. Yet they retain the sharp, spicy touches for which both designers are famous.

Fath's Collection Is Quite Small

FATH'S collection is quite small in number and has been made for the New York dress firm of Joseph Halpert. Dior's, on the other hand, is one of the largest in town, contains not only dresses, suits and coats, but hats, jewelry and stockings of his own design. In addition it has, for the first time, a new group of fur coat and fur pieces.

The two great French stylists have this much in common: for the first time they are putting shoulder pads in suits, rejecting the drooping shoulder line in that bracket of fashion. And they both give whole-hearted support to the short-slim, sheathe-like skirt for daytime, through evening.

Uses His Fabric For a Purpose

FATH is tricky with fabric, using it for a purpose always. He makes a dress that looks like a suit, even to the stiffened peplum: puts a knotted panel with chiffon scarf at the side of a tight skirt to make it look full.

Noteworthy in the Dior collection is the fact that he showed only one, wide-sweeping bouffant evening gown, and but one full skirted short cocktail dress. All the rest were slim, slit to the knee for action, partly covered with an intricately gathered overdrape falling into three panels.

High Heels Are Secret of Woman's Poise

London (U.P.).—The secret of a woman's pose? Dr. J. I. Aitken of University College, London, told chiropodists today that it comes from walking on high-heeled shoes, which forces them to throw their shoulders back.

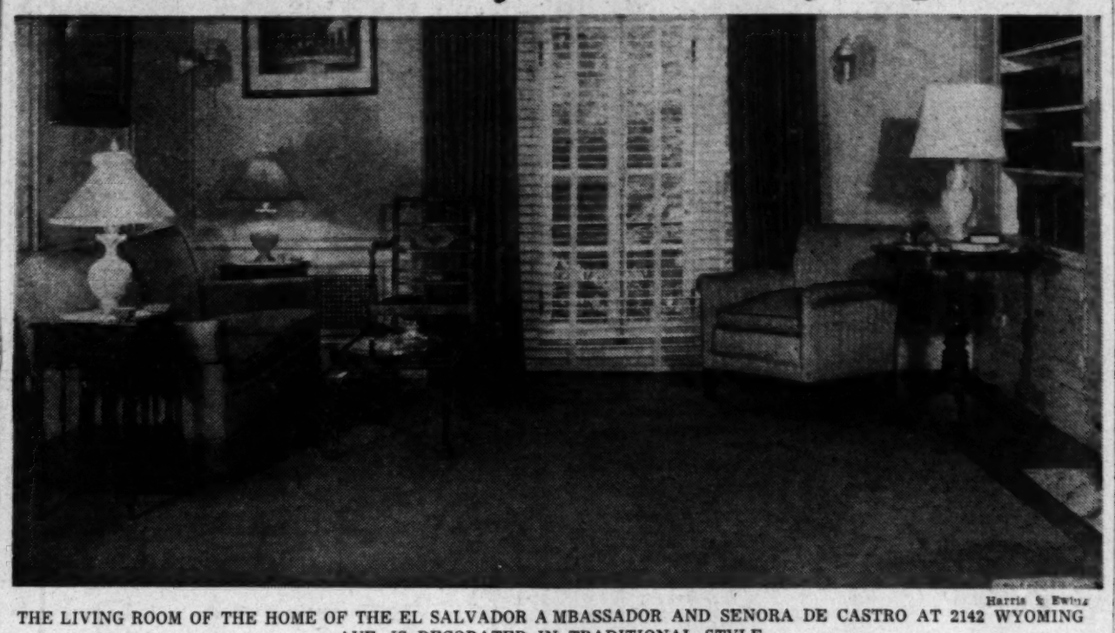
Inside the Embassies

El Salvador's Envoy Is a Family Diplomat



Harris & Ewing
THE LIVING ROOM OF THE HOME OF THE EL SALVADOR AMBASSADOR AND SENORA DE CASTRO AT 2142 WYOMING AVE. IS DECORATED IN TRADITIONAL STYLE

By Nicha Soure

THE Ambassador of El Salvador and Senora de Castro are probably Washington's most youthful grandparents.

Their "baby," 20-year-old Maria Teresa, could pass very easily for their oldest daughter. Instead, she is preceded by four brothers and one sister.

The older daughter, Mrs. Stanton Brown, has a 10-month-old baby, while their son, Alex, has two children, one 6 and the other 3 years old.

Washington has been graced by this popular couple for an intermittent period totaling 23 years. Ambassador de Castro first came to Washington as a Secretary of the Legation in 1920. In 1927 he left to return in 1934 as a Minister for a 10-year period.

Four days before President Roosevelt died, Dr. de Castro had again returned to the Capital, this time as Ambassador. He presented his credentials to President Truman in August, 1945, and has been his country's good will ambassador ever since.

His family has traveled with him in his many posts in public service since 1917. However, during the Ministers of Foreign Affairs Conference in Rio de Janeiro in 1942 they were left behind, much to the Ambassador's regret. It was one of the few times that the Castros didn't attend as a family unit and then it was because families were not allowed.

Coffee a Topic He Favors Most

ONE of the topics dearest to the Ambassador's heart is coffee. All the coffee in El Salvador is exported to the United States and the little nation ranks third in production, being superceded by Brazil and Colombia.

The Castros are a great coffee-drinking family in true patriotic tradition. To the American housewife, the Ambassador can add a cheery note for the family budget. This year he predicts that coffee prices will come down since the growers of that precious bean are expecting a better than average crop.

Although Dr. Castro rode horseback quite a bit back in El Salvador, his favorite leisure time recreation now is reading. In his spare time, which is usually late at night, he works on a book on an almost overwhelming subject. It is a comparative study of three international organizations: the League of Nations, the United Nations, and the Organization of American States.

Envoy's Wife Enjoys Canasta

WHAT about Senora de Castro? She is a "canasta fiend," according to the Ambassador. But she quickly chimes in that she definitely is not. "I just play to fill a table." Bringing up her six children has been her "hobby."

The professional fields have been enriched fourfold by the four Castro boys. Hector is a dentist and Benjamin a lawyer in Washington while their brother, Alex, is a surgeon and now lives in Bethesda. The fourth son, David, is an engineer in El Salvador. Pretty brown-eyed, brown-haired Teresa is living with her parents. The other daughter, Mrs. Stanton Brown, is with her American husband in the Canal Zone.

If Maria Teresa is the apple of her father's eye, it's no small wonder. Asked if this were the case, the Ambassador, in his best diplomatic manner, said, "But I have two eyes," smiling at his wife.

Women Slate Breakfast

The Credit Women's Breakfast Club of the Nation's Capital monthly meeting will be held on Wednesday, July 19, at 7:45 a. m. at the Willard Hotel.

Eat Today, for Tomorrow You Diet

Bob Burchette—The Washington Post

NORMA LANUM, IDA J. KAIN AND MRS. EDWARD TREGLOWN
"weighing in" for the two-week Summer Miracle Diet

By Ida Jean Kain

GO RIGHT on eating that good Sunday breakfast . . . slimming doesn't start until tomorrow . . .

If your will power has wilted, and you've been carelessly consuming frosted beverages and cold delicacies just teeming with calories, tune in to the Miracle of Summer Slimming, starting with breakfast tomorrow morning. It's just in the nick of time to keep you from crowding a larger size come fall.

Actually it takes little or no will power to lose a half pound a day in the good old summertime. The slimming is done on all the favorite foods . . . corn-on-the-cob, melons, fresh asparagus, summer berries, deviled eggs, seafoods, lean meats and crisp salads.

Continue Pattern
For More Poundage

THIS is not just a midsummer day dream—you can be a good 6 pounds lighter in the next two weeks. And if that's just a starter toward normal weight, continue the hot-weather reducing pattern and you can take off 20 pounds and be two sizes slimmer by fall.

But be prepared for delayed action. If you tend to store water, you may not have anything to show for the dieting until the week's end . . . or perhaps even into the second week. But keep right on trimming calories . . . you're losing, even if it doesn't show on the scales.

The series tips you off as to why cold foods are not always light fare, and on how to aid nature's cooling system. It shows how to have social calories and keep your figure, and gives the technique for eating a reducing shore dinner. It even includes water "slimnastics" for those who don't swim.

Think back . . . how many summers have you been going to take off excess weight? Face it . . . if you don't start this summer, chances are you will never banish the ugly fat that is keeping you from looking and feeling young. So start tomorrow . . . science proves you can lose faster in summer.

It's Those Friends

Pals Can Ruin A Gal's Diet From the Start

By Norma Lanum

IT'S enough to give a gal high blood pressure. As soon as she announces she's about to launch a new diet the well meaning friends start their routine:

"Oh, my dear, you don't need to lose any weight. You're just perfect the way you are."

Now how's she going to get rid of those extra pounds with that kind of support from her friends? It isn't as bad if she's obviously very much overweight. Friends will encourage her then.

Starting Diet
Under Handicap

MRS. EDWARD TREGLOWN and I are starting Ida Jean Kain's new Summer Miracle Diet—along with you readers tomorrow—with that handicap.

We're both overweight—not enough to cause alarm among our friends, but, just enough to make us feel uncomfortable and yearn for the return of those days when size 12 fit easily.

Chic, socially prominent Ruth Treglown gets invited to lots of parties. And, as she's sadly learned, parties mean pounds, unless you have the resistance of a rocky mountain.

"I've got no resistance," Ruth confesses. But she's decided not to let her hostesses and hosts know about her new diet. Then they won't be insisting that she indulge in seconds of all the rich dishes.

Has a Point
In Her Favor

ON the other hand there's one strong point in Ruth's favor. She doesn't hold down a job and can eat most of her meals at home if she wishes, thereby easily following to the letter the Kain menus.

Having a full-time job, I have to eat at least one meal in a restaurant—the midday meal. And that's the time when I'm hungriest.

Nevertheless both of us will be dieting right along with the rest of you Monday morning and we'll keep you informed on our progress. Ruth and I both are 5 feet 4 inches. I weigh 128 pounds, which might not be too bad if it were in the "right places," says Miss Kain. A good diet and a lot more exercise ought to put me in "good shape" reports the expert. Ruth's 132 pounds are well distributed and she looks trim as a movie star.

But she's determined that 5 or 10 pounds off will make her feel a lot better and look 100 percent better, too.

Here's the Odds on Triplets

New York (AP).—Mothers from 35 to 39 years old are most likely to have twins or triplets. For women in their late 30's the probability of a multiple birth is about 17 in 1000. For teen-age mothers, the probability is only six in 1000. These chances are cited in a Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. study involving 36 million confinements, based on data from the national office of vital statistics for 1934-47.

The chances that a birth will be twins are one in 92. For triplets it is one in 9400, for quadruplets one in 620,000. The only two authenticated cases in medical history of quintuplets being born and surviving are the Dionnes in Canada and the Diligentis in Argentina.

Fine Cut Glass Requires Special Care in Cleansing to Restore The Clear Brilliance of Its Facets

DEAR ANNE:

Have you any suggestions as to the proper way of cleaning cut glass? My cousin inherited a china closet full of it. She never uses it, but washes it once a year and has asked me to help her this year.

E. G., Harpers Ferry, W. Va.

Cut glass requires special care when it's time to tub it. Wash each piece separately so as not to scratch and dim its gleaming facets. Use a soft brush, mild soap, and warm water. After drying, place on Turkish towelling—in the towel—so that the last bits of moisture will be entirely absorbed.

If the time has come to restore the brilliant luster cut glass should emanate, omit the towel treatment and, while the pieces are still moist, dip them into jeweler's sawdust. Let them dry in the sawdust and then wipe it off with a very soft cloth. For an extra gleam, polish with a piece of soft, crumpled tissue.

DEAR ANNE:

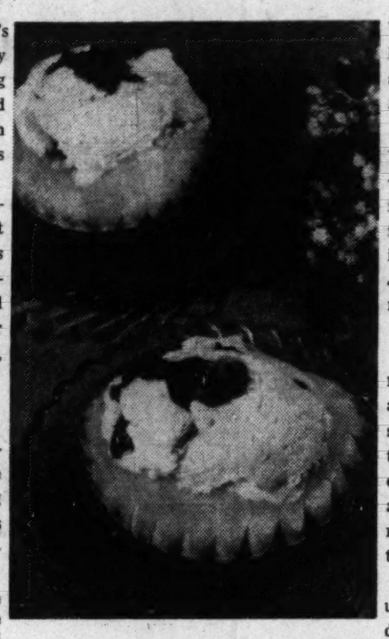
My husband is interested in furthering his education under the GI bill. He has just about decided to study engineering and perhaps later, industrial designing, as he likes mathematics, sketching, and constructing wooden pieces of furniture.

So many folks have told him that these fields are overcrowded. Is there anywhere that pamphlets or advice can be obtained about the different fields that need more men and what kind of school and interests you should have to enter each field?

O. S., Fort Belvoir, Va.

If your husband is eligible for training under the GI bill, he is also eligible for vocational counselling and to take vocational aptitude tests through the Veteran's Administration. I'd suggest that he visit the VA Regional Contact Office, Room 118, 1825 H st. nw., for further information. After some preliminaries, he can get an interview with a trained vocational counselor who is well posted on the needs in different fields and can advise him according to his aptitudes.

Another thing he might do is to write the United States Department of Labor for its latest Occupational Outlook bulletin. I'd suggest he mention the fields in which he is interested when he writes.



ICE CREAM time is really here! Serve America's favorite in a fluted half cantaloup, topped with a dash of preserves for color

DEAR ANNE:

My husband dropped the "junior" from his name many years ago when his father died. What is the proper way for my informals to be worded? If I say "Mrs. John Doe," it will be the same as his mother's name and might cause confusion.

Mary Doe, Washington, D. C.

When a widow's son—one who has the name of his father—marries, the widow may add "senior" to her name. Or else she may simply use "Mrs. Doe," omitting all Christian names, if the last name is distinctive enough. This clarifies matters if the family all live in the same town, but usually isnt necessary if they live in different parts of the country.

It would definitely be incorrect for you to use "junior" now that your husband has dropped this word from his name. It would be better for your mother-in-law to add "senior" to hers, though asking her to do so would undoubtedly present a problem in tact.

Panama Hat Centennial Is Here—Sort Of

By Cynthia Lowry

New York, July 15 (AP).—If you wear a Panama hat this summer, you're helping the hat makers celebrate a centennial.

It isn't really the birthday of the Panama. It does mark a hundred years from the time that particular type of vegetable hat was discovered by disappointed California '49ers returning East by way of Panama.

(It should be explained here that hat men call anything a vegetable hat that is made from natural materials. A Panama is a vegetable hat because it is woven from the fibers of the toquilla palm which is a species of stemless screw pine.)

The gold rush boys bought their lightweight hats in Panama on the way back home. Pretty soon they were all the rage and it got to be part of the costume of the aristocracy, particularly the Southern planters.

In a way this is ironic because Panama hats are not made in Panama, but in Ecuador. Also they are not woven under water, no matter what tourist tales you hear, and they have been around much longer than a mere one 100 years.

An Ecuadorian named Francisco Delcado is reported to have woven the first Panama in 1630, which was 320 years ago, but the Panama hat people give him only a passing salute because 320 years isn't a very good round anniversary number.

The fiber is woven while damp. To do this, the Indians work in shaded sheds, preferably during a rainfall or in the early morning humidity. Moisture makes the fiber pliant.

Most weavers can't read or write, so the commission merchant indicates what kind of hats he wants by giving them pieces of broken fiber showing the size, and presenting samples of weaving. There are some six different types of weave, with classy Spanish names. It wasn't until the 1930s that the Indians started making loose weaves which allow for air circulation around the top of the head.

New Style and Old, Up Go the 'Homes of 1950'

Committee Selects First Group of Homes

By Robert P. Jordan

THE "HOMES of 1950" exhibition—a four-week opportunity for Washingtonians to study the best in new homes and home furnishings being offered at the mid-century mark—is fast taking shape.

Last month, a three-man committee—builder, architect, realtor—was set up to judge all homes proposed to be a part of the exhibition. Yesterday the committee reported it had approved plans and specifications for six homes. Others are in the works.

In announcing the first selections, committee members (Edward R. Carr, builder; Frank J. Luchs, realtor, and John M. Walton, architect) said that they will be subject to a continuing check during construction, as will all Homes of 1950. Here are the six homes, their builders, and furnishers:

Beitzell Construction Co., Inc.: a contemporary-style, ranch-type home under construction in Woodside Park, Montgomery County. Malcolm Scates, Inc., will furnish.

John R. de Sibour & Co., Inc.; a Georgetown colonial row house to be erected at 3343 Reservoir rd. nw. Woodward & Lothrop will furnish.

W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co.: a Williamsburg colonial being built at the corner of Rockwood Parkway and Tilden st. nw. Furnishings will be by Mayer & Co.

Potomac Construction Co.; a stone-and-brick ranch-type home to be built in Silver Spring's Forest Grove section off Colesville rd. The home will be furnished by Milton H. Rossler, Inc.

M. T. Broyhill & Sons, Inc.: a two-story English and colonial-type home under construction at 4501 26th st. N., Arlington. Biggs Antique Co., Inc., will furnish.

O. F. Smith & Bros.: a contemporary-style one-story brick home to be constructed on Fallstone ave. in Somerset, Md., adjoining Kenwood. Furnishings will be by the William E. Miller Co., Inc.

These homes and 18 or so others—some unfurnished—will be presented for daily public inspection during the four weeks beginning September 10. Sponsors of the mass exhibition are building concerns, furniture stores, and The Washington Post.

Wide Price Range

WHEN ALL the Homes of 1950 are selected, they are expected to range in price from $10,000 to $60,000. They will be located in the District, in nearby Maryland, and in nearby Virginia.

And it won't cost a penny to look them over from basement to attic as often as desired.

The big show is free. It's the third annual display of new model homes and home furnishings put on by builders and furniture stores and this newspaper to give Washingtonians a first-hand look at the best on the market.

Here are brief sketches of the Homes of 1950 already selected and how they are to be furnished.

The Beitzell home, a one-story ranch-type dwelling, will be modern from top to bottom, with livability stressed. Built-in dressers and closets will be found in the bedrooms; the south wall of the living room will be of plate glass; floors will be parquet.

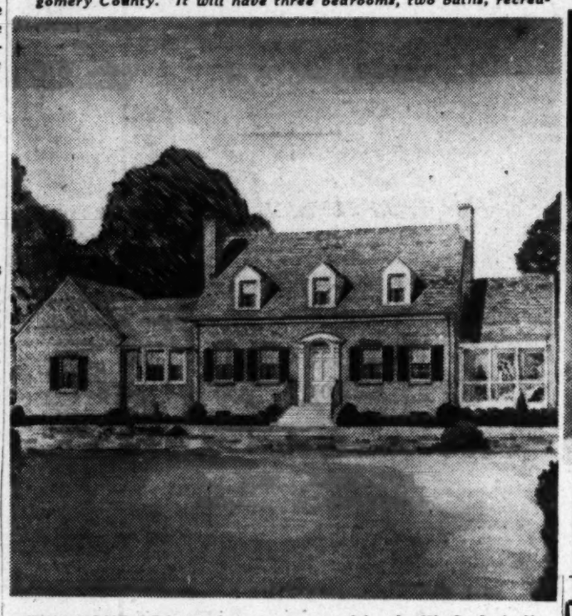
AN EARLY SELECTION as one of the Homes of 1950 is this contemporary-style, one-story home being built by Beitzell Construction Co., Inc., off Colesville pike in Woodside Park, Montgomery County. It will have three bedrooms, two baths, recreation room in basement, numerous built-in space savers. Designed by Joseph Abel, one of its features is a wall of plate glass at one end of the living room. The home is to be furnished by Malcolm Scates, Inc.



THIS HOME OF '50 is being constructed by the W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co. at the corner of Rockwood Parkway and Tilden st. nw. A Williamsburg colonial, the sand-finish, red brick home will contain four bedrooms, three baths, two-car garage, large center hall. It is to be furnished by Mayer & Co.

HERE IS THE HOME OF '50 now under construction by M. T. Broyhill & Sons, Inc., at 4501 26th st. N., Arlington. The two-story brick home—a combination of English and colonial design—has living porch, three bedrooms on the second floor, garage, basement with recreation room. Biggs Antique Co., Inc., will furnish it

D. C. Gets New Elevator-Type Apartments

CONSTRUCTION of a 137-unit apartment building — newest elevator-type project in the District—is just getting under way at 4301 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Ground was broken for the structure last week. It is to be eight stories in height from the front and 11 stories tall from the rear. Construction cost is estimated in the neighborhood of three million dollars.

This was announced yesterday by Charles I. Kaplan, secretary-treasurer of Standard Construction Co., which will build the apartment house. The company also is erecting the vast 800-unit Berkshire apartments adjacent to the new project.

Kaplan said the apartments would be "luxury-type." The smallest unit will have at least one bedroom. In all, there are to be 38 one-bedroom units, 62 two-bedroom units, and 37 three-bedroom units. Apartments with two-and three-bedrooms will have two baths, he reported.

Other features include air con-

Home Builders' Official Says

Real War to Mean Construction Curbs

IN TERMS of your home and housing in general, what will happen if the Korean situation develops into a major war? What effect will the shooting in Korea have on housing in the immediate future?

Here is a report on Federal plans for housing centered around these questions. It has just been made by Frank W. Cortright, executive vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, to the group's membership over the country.

The report followed NAHB conferences with the National Security Resources Board and other Government agencies and officials. It is the result of numerous queries from the press and individuals as to the immediate and foreseeable future of home building and housing in relation to war.

Cortright told builders that the Korean conflict should not make any drastic change in the progress of the current home building boom, and that NAHB is not suggesting that controls of any sort are likely to be imposed or the Government's plans be activated unless a grave emergency comes about.

Some of the questions which have been raised follow. Cortright's answers are his "best guesses."

1. In the event of all-out war, would current home building be stopped?

"No further construction could be started, but housing well under way would probably be permitted to be completed on a minimum basis."

2. Would materials and manpower be allocated.

"Materials would undoubtedly be allocated on a priority basis following the pattern of World War II."

3. What kind of housing could be built?

"Only minimum war housing under rigid Governmental control for war workers and military personnel."

4. Would occupancy be controlled?

"Rigid restriction and occupancy controls would be instituted. There would be a minimum of requisition and a maximum of conversion."

5. In the event of bombing, what temporary care will be taken of victims?

"This is the National Security Resources Board's number one problem. Temporary sharing of all existing facilities would be required and elaborate provision for temporary shelter of various kinds, including the mobile shelter of trailers, demountables, and even tent cities."

Following conferences with Federal officials, Cortright concluded that these three eventualities must be considered:

The Korean conflict may continue as a minor military operation with small expenditures of men, money and materiel and with no resultant major impact on the housing economy.

"It seems clear that under this alternative the home building industry's only job will be to keep on with its record-breaking volume of good housing of all types in all price classifications in all communities."

The second possibility, he says, is that it may develop into a major conflict requiring an all-out war effort by this and other nations but, as in World Wars I and II, fighting would be on foreign shores and our great industrial centers and seaports would not be bombed.

In this event, "the industry's work will closely parallel its war housing construction during World War II. It will be to house the war worker at both reconverted and new production facilities for the armed services, and for civilian and military personnel engaged in the war effort."

The third eventuality is that maximum conflict could come about and this country subjected to atomic or other types of bombing.

"Under the third possibility, not only must housing for in-migrant war workers and others be provided, but we will have the staggering task of repairing bombed structures and housing evacuees."

Construction Employment High

Reflecting the high level of building activity, employment in contract construction rose to 2.24 million in May, an increase of 178,000 over April and 106,000 above May, 1949. The April-May increase was the largest to occur between those two months in any year since 1942, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

'Homes of '50' Being Selected By Committee

cause of the large glass areas in the house, will be made by Clifford Powell, Malcolm Scales, Inc., decorator. He plans interesting combinations of new fabrics and colors. Traditional cherry furniture will be used against a modern background.

The de Sibour home, a brick row house in the colonial Georgetown style, will be built of aged brick taken from old houses. Old mantels found in New England will distinguish fireplaces. The living room will open onto a small garden.

Woodward & Lothrop's furnishings will be in the dignified eighteenth century manner—but the color treatment will be strictly modern. The new House and Garden colors, forecast for fall by this national magazine, will be used by Home Furnishing Coordinator Lois Wannan in the house.

The W. C. & A. N. Miller house, a Williamsburg colonial, will contain eight rooms (four bedrooms—three on the second floor, one on the first), library with fireplace, eight-foot-wide center hall, and numerous quality features.

Decorative details are being studded by Mayer & Co.

The Potomac Construction Co. home, a stone-and-brick rambler, will have built-in bookcases, laundry chute, knotty-pine third bedroom which may be used as a den or study, large patio, hand-cut stone fireplace.

For this modern house, Milton H. Rossler, Inc., will use furniture that combines durability with sleek new lines and finishes. High colors will make the rooms bright and alive. A Chinese influence will be evidenced in striking accessories.

The M. T. Broyhill & Sons home, a house of both English and Colonial styling, will feature large room sizes throughout. Three unusually large bedrooms will be on the second floor; the basement will have a recreation room and maid's room with bath.

Miss Rosalie De Voto, of the Biggs Antique Co., will use the authentic antique reproductions made by this firm in Richmond to decorate the home. The ancient charm of the furniture will be matched by soft colors and reproductions of old fabrics that Miss De Voto is selecting for walls and draperies.

The O. F. Smith & Bros. home, a rambler with colonial touches, will feature large rooms, sliding-door closets with tiers of shelves on one side, modern one-story livability with the charm of colonial styling in iron work, wood arches, and soft shades of brick used in construction.

Plans for its decoration have not been completed by the William E. Miller Co., Inc.

Two Flats to Be Built

Two flats, each of two units, are planned for construction at 606-8 Southern ave. se. by William Loffler, 601 Southern ave. se. Permit application has been made.

ANOTHER OF THE HOMES OF 1950 is this ranch-style home being built by Potomac Construction Co. off Georgia ave. in the Forest Grove section of Silver Spring. Features include full basement, stone and brick construction, three bedrooms, laundry chutes, and others. The home will be furnished by Milton H. Rossler, Inc.

Permit Asked For 24 Houses

Permit has been requested to build 24 two-story and basement homes in the 100 and 200 blocks of Anacostia ave. ne. Owner-builder is River Terrace Co., 3317 E. Capitol st. The homes are to be of brick and cinderblock construction and 16 by 31 feet in size. Subbids are being taken.

Slim and Trim Is the Trend In New Sofas and Chairs

By Harriet Morrison

SOFAS and chairs—the backbone of a living room—are going three directions at once, judging by summer showings of new pieces that look toward fall. The over-stuffed look has gone. In its place we have slimmed-down shapes with soft, rather than harsh, lines.

An increased desire for a touch of elegance has brought on a revival of 18th Century English pieces as well as French Provincial. Chinese modern continues to be important.

The trend in advanced modern is toward more compact shapes that do not sacrifice the seating comfort of more bulky chairs and sofas. Foam rubber construction makes the trim shape possible.

For large or small rooms, a feeling of spaciousness, an expanse of floor space and walls that recede rather than close in are desired today. Families want their homes to have a quiet look and a restful feeling. They want comfortable sofas and chairs to fit their present day needs.

These needs may call for designs that can fit into several types of interiors if the family plans to move. All these factors influence the design of present-day sofas and chairs.

The desire for the uncluttered look that is not stark has created interest in metal furnishings all over the house. In sofas, metal legs or bentwood mahogany legs are found in increasing numbers.

Decorative Details

THE tufted, compact sofa with metal strap legs and with a short back, typifies a present-day trend toward upholstered pieces with a suggestion of elegant that is scaled to at small homes. The tufted design adds interest.

To meet the desire for versatile upholstered pieces that allow for a variety of conversation groupings in a room, this sofa, among others, comes with or without arms. Put them together with a table between on one long wall or place one at right angles to a picture window.

Sectional sofas this season have crisper lines than formerly. Here again slim legs appear to avoid bulkiness. Where there are curves they are gentle rather than bold. Curves are much in evidence.

The straight-backed, boxy type of sofa is rarely found. A desire for soft, graceful lines in contemporary designs has given us both chairs and sofas with subtle curves.

Curves—Not Angles

GENTLE curves are found in the backs of this season's version of the wing chair and in companion chairs to please a husband and wife. Tub-type chairs for television viewing are provided with swivel bases. In fact, a variety of lounge chairs that swivel can be found this season. They may have high or low backs. Many are round in shape.

Home Owners Invest Readily In Property Improvements

ONE DOLLAR out of every six of loan insurance written by the Federal Housing Administration is for the repair, alteration, and improvement of existing properties.

The typical property improvement loan insured by FHA during 1949 provided the borrower with $353, had a maturity of 36.4 months, and was used to improve a single-family dwelling, according to FHA's annual report which is to be released soon.

"The Federal Housing Administration insured private financial institutions in 1949 against loss on unsecured loans aggregating 607 million dollars for the repair, alteration and improvement of existing properties," Franklin D. Richards, FHA Commissioner, said yesterday.

This 1949 total, only 2 percent below the 1948 all-time-high, was a continuation of postwar record activity under Title I of the National Housing Act.

In recent years, the annual volume under this Title I modernization plan has been almost triple its prewar level, and, between 1946 and 1948 alone, the annual rate doubled, the report shows.

As of the end of 1949, national banks were the leading type of institution financing Title I loans, accounting for 42 percent of the total amount financed by all institutions from 1934 through 1949.

Next were State chartered banks and finance companies which each accounted for 28 percent of the total. Savings and loan associations and other types made up the remaining 2 percent.

Home Builders Shatter All Records at Mid-Year

AS OF THE end of June, home builders had racked up an all-time high for any half-year on record—687,000 new dwelling units put under construction since January 1 over the Nation.

This was announced yesterday by the Labor Department's bureau of labor statistics. Dubbing the total as "preliminary estimate," the bureau said late reports are expected to push the figure even higher.

The January-June total was 53 percent above the 449,000 dwelling units started in the comparable period last year.

Last month, the bureau reported, 142,000 units were placed under construction—a number which outstripped all previous monthly peaks. June's total represented a gain of nearly 50 percent over the same month in 1949.

Final reports brought total dwelling units started in the first quarter of 1950 up to 278,900, a sharp increase of 109,100 units, or 64 percent, above the same months of 1949.

One-family home construction, the focal point of the present housing activity, accounted for 81 percent (226,000 units) of total housing volume for the first quarter of this year, against 77 percent (131,300 units) for the same period last year.

Rising Costs, Easy Financing Spur Home Sales

A "NOTABLE change" in real estate markets over the country took place in the first half of this year, it was reported yesterday: many of the Nation's potential home buyers gave up waiting for prices to level and bought houses.

Increased volume of home sales showed up in a survey of 252 cities just made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Generally, NAREB announced, the study disclosed "a new public disposition toward immediate real estate investment."

Sudden rise in construction costs was an alert for investors, according to Herbert U. Nelson, NAREB executive vice president. More favorable financing for home purchases—especially for veterans—opened the door, he said.

Deeper cause for the increased volume of buying, Nelson observed, is a spreading feeling that "used house prices are not going down much more," or that a new inflation period is building up.

An uptrend in general market volume as compared with six months ago is the present picture in 57 percent of the surveyed cities, according to the official. Cities with a population of more than 100,000 lead the trend, he said, with real estate investment volume increased recently in 72 percent of them.

Survey Results

PRINCIPAL findings of the survey follow:

1. Buying of residential property of all types is in greater volume than it was six months ago in 46 percent of the reporting cities, in 86 percent of all cities of over 500,000 population, and in 75 percent of the cities of over 100,000 population.

2. Plans for future home building are at a pitch that has pushed up the prices of suitable vacant lots. This price rise on desirable in-town lots with utilities has been experienced in every reporting city of over 100,000 population and in 77 percent of all surveyed cities reporting on this question.

The price advance in the last six months has usually been no more than 5 percent, but in some cities it is 15 percent, 30 percent, or even, as in one reporting city, 50 percent.

3. Recent increase in construction costs is reported as an important market factor by representative cities of every geographical region of the country. Despite the fact that builders have been absorbing a major share of the new cost bulge, that bulge has begun to push up the selling price of new houses in a number of reporting communities and threatens to do so in other communities.

4. The volume of new house sales is definitely higher than it was six months ago. The increased volume is notable in 52 percent of all reporting cities and in 72 percent of the cities of over 100,000 population, while only 13 percent of all the country's cities had some decrease in sales.

5. Favorable financing recently made available for new houses puts older homes at a newly-felt disadvantage in respect to sales. And people are growing more "new-house minded." But despite the competition of the new, volume of sales of used houses remains at least as high as it was six months ago in 61 percent of the reporting cities, and is higher in 29 percent of the cities.

6. Adjustment of used-home prices to a normal housing situation means lower prices than prevailed six months ago in 64 percent of the reporting cities, but prices stay at last year's level in 56 percent of the cities of over 100,000 population and in 29 percent of all cities reporting. Used-house prices have begun to go up again in 8 percent of the larger cities and in 7 percent of all reporting cities.

Effect of Controls

WHERE rent controls have been lifted, the effect has been encouraging to real estate ownership, particularly to ownership of apartment properties, Nelson said. But from areas still controlled came reports like these:

From a middle-sized New York city—"Purchase of older properties for modernizing as income properties is out, due to rent controls." From a middle-sized Pennslyvania city—"Rent control still retards sale of multiple-family units, and the market for this type of real estate is slow."

With housing again plentiful, families are free to seek "something better" than they now have, many reports point out. How far a rise in housing standards may be opening up a new market, Nelson said, is indicated by this fact:

Despite the millions of new dwellings constructed in American cities in the last 2½ years, only one city of the 252 surveyed describes its housing market as having "about reached the saturation point."

One other city foresees "absorption point coming, but probably not until late spring of 1951." Two cities comment that they now have enough houses of the two-bedroom type.

War preparedness, even before the Korean outbreak, as part of the background for the current public attitude is phrased this way in a report from Michigan:

"Even though we will probably not be at war, it looks as though we will be preparing for an all-out war. As a result, the employment prospects are brighter. People who have waited since the end of the war to build at 'reasonable costs' are now resigned to the fact that if they are ever going to have a home, they hadn't better wait any longer; perhaps all price levels will be higher from now on."

Principal causes for the change in the real estate market are summarized by other cities as follows:

Grand Rapids, Mich.—"Bulk of buyers are young people who formerly would have waited for 10 years but are now buying. People who have waited have seen increased prices. 'Wait until lower prices' has not been heard here for almost six months."

Bronx, N. Y.—"Customers are 'shopping around' with a keen eye for value. Urgency for shelter no longer exists."

St. Paul—"Federal deficit financing, inflationary Federal trends and policies. Public has come to the conclusion that prices are not going down."

Construction Dollar Buys Most Value in Miami

MIAMI, Fla.—Buyers get more dollar value for home construction here than virtually any other part of the United States, according to two Federal authorities.

The statement was made during investigations in Miami by Joseph P. McMurray, staff director of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and Robert R. Poston, assistant to the administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

"You don't have the need for expensive heating systems and basements here," McMurray explained, and added: "The $6000 home is no longer a drawing-board dream, but a concrete reality dotting almost every section of Greater Miami."

Since this area started its post-war building program in advance of most of the country and has continued since at peak activity, the two Federal officials are here to observe trends which might affect the rest of the Nation's operations.

McMurray said he thinks the housing situation here is "more normal than in other cities. Most of them are underbuilt," he explained.

'Straightline' System

If Dishwashing Is a Chore, Here's a Method to Explore

FEW housewives, it would seem, like to do the dishes. In fact, the very sight of a couple of stacks is often enough to result in a call for the aid of the man-of-the-house.

Trouble is, he generally doesn't care much for the task either.

Delving into this problem recently, researchers came up with a report that the average homemaker washes more than half a dozen tons of dishes a year. Some kitchen equipment manufacturers have said that fewer than 10 out of 100 homes have kitchens with good dishwashing facilities.

What to do? Here's a suggestion. Try "straightline" dishwashing. Ideal equipment for this is a double-bowl sink. Here's how it's done:

First, scrape the dishes and stack them next to the right hand bowl. Fill the right bowl with hot, sudsy water. Place a rubber covered dishdrainer on the left hand bowl. Glassware should be washed first, followed by silverware, plates and cups.

As the dishes are washed, transfer them to the draining basket. It will hold all the dishes used by an average sized family at a meal. Douse the dishes with steaming hot water, washing away the suds and residue.

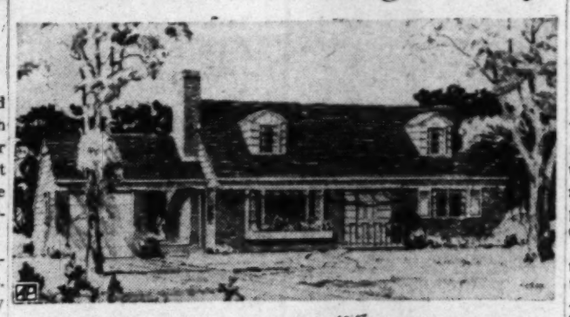
You can leave the dishes to drain and air dry or they can easily be polished with a towel. Stack dry dishes to left of the bowl. Presto! the job is done.

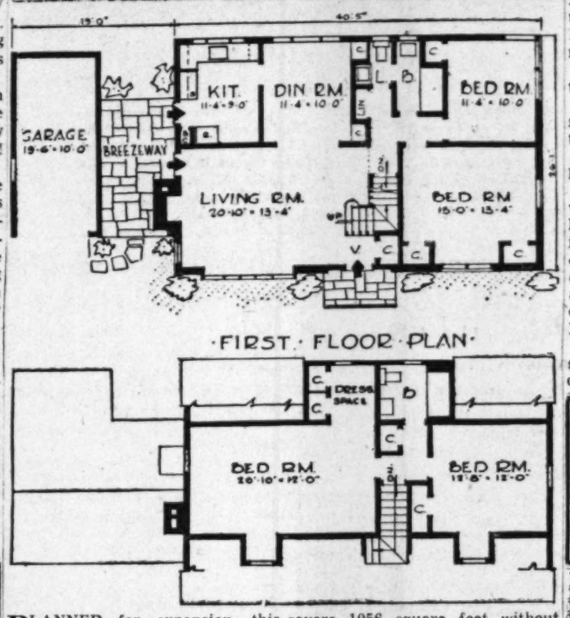
At "company time" when there are more dishes than usual, it is suggested that glasses and silverware be washed, rinsed, and immediately dried. In the meantime plates are placed in the washing bowl to be soaked. Then get on with the job and it's done quicker and easier than you can imagine.

Backyard Barbecue

You won't mind smoke in your eyes if it comes from a backyard barbecue that helps you entertain more guests with less effort. A well drained base, firebrick inside walls, red brick outside walls, brick chimney and flagstone surfaces are good for the outdoor barbecue.

House for a Growing Family





FIRST FLOOR PLAN

PLANNED for expansion, this house can be built with the second floor unfinished, and garage and breezeway can be added later. When completed, the four-bedroom and two-bath home has a large family capacity.

One of its features is a divided bathroom on the first floor with a washstand in each section. This lends it many of the advantages of two baths.

The long living room and seperate dining room opening off it are other features. The living room is distinguished by a turning open stairway.

This is plan No. 2528 by Herman York, architect, 199-33 Keno ave., Hollis 7, N. Y. The house covers 1056 square feet without garage and breezeway. Plans call for a full basement. Main portion of the house is 40½ feet wide, making it suitable for average lots.

Residential Area to Be Surveyed Here

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY will survey a "potential residential redevelopment area" in the District as a means of finding out—for future housing use—what can happen when an area is redeveloped one way or another.

The survey will be made under the housing research program of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Designation of the area to be surveyed will be made by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The university's study will be in two parts:

1. An extensive pilot study of family patterns, community activities and race relations.

2. An intensive survey of selected problems.

"This study provides for the development of methods of the collection of sociological information in such a manner that better predictions can be made as to the social consequences of redeveloping an area one way or another," according to HHFA Administrator Raymond M. Foley.

It is expected to be valuable in slum clearance and urban redevelopment programs, HHFA said.

Housing Studies Announced

Two housing research projects, one for a critical study of the concepts and methods of housing market analysis, and the other to provide needed information on the nature and effects of residential mobility are to be made by Columbia University under the HHFA housing research program, Administrator Raymond M. Foley of the Housing and Home Finance Agency announced yesterday.

Dealers Handle Greater Flow Of Materials

RETAIL building supply dealers are handling a considerably greater quantity of materials than they did a decade ago, according to C. B. Sweet, president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

"Analysis of the recent census of business shows that the amount of materials distributed through retail yards in 1948 was 58 percent greater than in 1939, after allowing for the increase in materials prices between the two census years," Sweet said.

Actual sales of all reporting dealers totaled $5.13 billion in 1948, as compared with $1.48 billion in 1939, he reported.

The number of employes in retail yards increased 56 percent, he said, despite greater efficiency in materials handling and improved management methods. The reason for this is because dealers have been performing numerous additional services for customers, according to the lumber official.

"New services which dealers were not generally offering at the time of the 1939 census include precutting of materials, preassembly of building parts and of small structures, packaging and strapping of materials, and aid to customers in the planning and financing of their building projects.

"The number of retail materials dealers reported by the census increased only 4 percent, from 25,067 to 26,128. Sales volume per dealer averaged $196,600 in 1948. The number of employes increased from 138,957 to 216,607."

Studies of Home Financing Method To Be Undertaken

STUDIES of the financing of homebuilding and home buying operations are to be made under the housing research program of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Administrator Raymond M. Foley announced yesterday.

Methods used by homebuilders in financing construction operations will be studied by the University of Indiana in selected mid-western cities. A study of a local home mortgage market will be made by the University of Maryland at Hagerstown, Md.

Both studies were developed under the supervision of Dr. Richard U. Ratcliff, director of the HHFA housing research division, as part of the program directed toward increased and sustained production of more adequate housing at lower costs.

Reed Corp. Slates 20 Dwellings

Richard N. Reed Corp., 618 Colorado Building, has asked for a permit to construct 20 homes on 71st ave. in Seat Pleasant, Md. They are to be two-stories in height, 16x25 feet each, and of brick and cinderblock construction.

18-Unit Apartment House Proposed

Plans are nearly completed for a four-story, 18-unit apartment building to be constructed at 16th st. and New Hampshire ave. nw. Owner is William Cohen, 1245 1st st. se.

The structure is to be of brick and cinderblock construction. Architect is W. Ellis Groben, 1361 Irving st. nw. General bids will be asked shortly.

Work Starts On Modern-Type Paint Shop

CONTRACTS have been let and construction started by the Fred S. Gichner Iron Works, Inc., on a new building at 24th and M sts. nw., which will be used for painting of motor truck and trailer bodies, it was announced yesterday.

The building is to be erected immediately adjoining the company's truck body construction plant.

Equipment includes an air conditioning system that will provide treated and purified air best suited to painting operations; explosion-proof lighting fixtures; and large spray units making possible work on four or more pieces of equipment simultaneously.

The building is to be of brick and cinderblock construction. Ceiling height is 14 feet. Work space will be heated by steam from the company's adjoining plant.

Summer House Repairs Prevent Winter Fires

RUN-DOWN homes, disorder and improper equipment were the prime mechanical forces that accounted for the 30,500 killed and 4,500,000 injured in home accidents last year, studies show.

Hazardous conditions existing in 51 percent of the Nation's 43,000,000 homes that are 30 or more years old may aggravate the toll this year, according to John E. Haines, vice president of the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.

Falls, burns, explosions and fires— common to over-age homes in need of repair or modernization — were the most frequent types of accidents, he said.

Defective home heating equipment causes an average of 49,000 home fires annually and, he advised, homeowners hould use the summer months when heating plants are idle, to check, repair and condition furnaces, chimneys and flues. New heat control systems with automatic cutoff valves provide the best home protection against fires, he added.

In Home Design

Big Windows To Be Ever With Us

MOST people think of a home as an investment, the most important investment of their lives. And when buying a new home or building one, they do so with an eye to the future.

The idea is to invest in a house that is not only modern and salable today but will be easy to sell 10 or 20 years from now as well.

What buyers will want in a house in the distant future is difficult to predict. Perhaps the long-popular Cape Cod house will still be a favorite. Maybe there will be a reaction against the ranch-style home, or then again it may be the number one choice.

Tastes and preferences will change. Those features will be retained permanently that offer the best combination of livability and utility to the prospective purchaser.

For that reason, forecasts the Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co., the swing to large windows is here to stay. Not many years ago, most homes had small windows broken up by a multitude of tiny panes. Today's home has picture windows, corner windows and and window walls. Even the conventional double-hung window is becoming more popular in larger sizes.

The tendency is away from small panes that break the view and bar the light, according to the company. People want more natural light. They want to bring the beauty of the outdoors inside the home.

Large windows used to be a luxury. They meant higher fuel bills and a lot of unwanted heat in summer. Now that double-paned insulating glass has been developed, however, it is practical to have the walls of glass in every home.

The investor with foresight will look for such window treatment in any home he plans to buy or build, the company asserts.

Construction Awards Set Peacetime Record

NEW YORK (AP).—Engineering construction contract awards reported in the week ended Monday totalled $364,963,000 for a new peacetime record, according to Engineering News-Record.

The engineering construction weekly said the total was three million dollars over the peacetime record of 362 million dollars the week of December 2, 1948—but 70 million dollars under the all-time high of 435 million dollars the wartime week of May 7, 1942.

The volume was 63 percent above the weekly average to date this year and brought the cumulative total for the first 28 weeks of 1950 to $6,244,408,000—46 percent higher than last year.

Private contracts accounted for $254,053,000, and included a 117 million dollar gas pipe line construction award to Fish Pipe Line Construction Co. by People's Light & Coke Co. The contract is for a major portion of the 145 million dollar line from Corpus Christi, Tex., to Joliet and Chicago, Ill.

Public contract awards totalled $110,910,000.

Architect Lauded For School Design

Silver Spring's new Forest Grove Elementary School and the architect who designed it, Ronald S. Senseman, share the praise of the editors of Progressive Architecture in the magazine's July issue.

A pictorial article hails the school as "an unusually good illustration of the essentially plastic quality of architectural design in relation to the problems of land contours and the comfort of those who use the building."

Permit Issued For Arlington Homes

Old Dominion Developers, 629 N. Illinois st., Arlington, have received a permit to construct 14 one-story houses in the 1200 blocks of S. Frederick st. and S. Hamilton dr. and the 1900 block of S. George Mason dr., Arlington.

14 Dwellings Proposed

Permit is being sought by Harry Poretsky & Sons, Inc., to build 14 homes in the 700 block of Sheridan st., Hyattsville. The houses will be 1½ stories in height and of brick and cinderblock construction.

Vets Reminded:

Combined VA-FHA Home Loan Insurance Ends October 20

THE combination VA-FHA home loan guarantee—popular with veterans because it keeps down payments on new houses to a minimum—will expire October 20.

Under the Housing Act of 1950, ending of the combination loan was called for by December 31. The Veterans' Administration has set the October date as the cut-off.

Veterans were reminded of this yesterday by the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington. The association also voiced the hope that Congress "will revive the combination loan if veterans find it leaves too wide a gap in their home financing setup."

The reminder came from Clarke Daniel, association president. He emphasized that veterans who have used up a part of their GI home loan guarantee must use the remainder by October 20 if the combination VA-FHA mortgage insurance is desired.

He pointed out that the remaining GI guarantee could not be used after that date for home purchasing if financed through the FHA.

"Many veterans have purchased homes using only a small portion of their GI guarantee," Daniel explained. "Through no fault of their own, they have moved or changed jobs, or need larger quarters. The remaining portion of the GI guarantee can often be used to buy another home."

The combination loan has been a widely-used financing method in the purchase of new homes by veterans because it holds down payments to a minimum. Here's how it works: For instance, a new home costs $10,000, of which the FHA will insure a first mortgage of $8000. The VA then guarantees the remaining $2000, with the veteran paying no cash down.

After the October 20 cut-off date, said Daniel, veterans can still use their remaining guarantee on homes purchased on a straight GI loan basis. It can not be combined with an FHA-insured loan, however.

In the majority of such cases, he said, the lending institution will require a substantial cash down payment. On the current combination FHA-VA loan, the veteran makes no down payment in most instances.

"It is the sincere hope of this association and its members that the Congress will revive the combination loan if veterans find it leaves too wide a gap in their home financing setup," Daniel declared.

"Organized home builders see no need to discriminate against responsible veterans in need of housing just because they don't have a backlog of savings. If they are financially responsible and able to maintain regular monthly mortgage payments, then they should be given the benefit of continued combination VA-FHA loans."

QUALITY With ECONOMY

A Timely Note

An estimated three million chronological devices, ranging from timing mechanisms that operate toasters to automatic electric clock thermostats that watch heating plants, have changed us into a nation watched-over-by-clocks, comments Dr. Waldo Kliever, director of research, Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. He expects the variety of timing devices included in new home "packages" to swell the total. For example, a new demand for "zoning" homes into separate heating areas will mean installation of two or three extra automatic thermostats in homes.

The Big Wind

'Little Blowhard' Endears Himself to Hapless Victims

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK—It looks like "Little Blowhard" has come to our house to stay.

He has practically become one of the family. And, what is worse, he acts like one. All this in the space of a year.

But I don't know what we'd do without him—he's become so much a part of our lives.

"Little Blowhard" isn't a cat, a dog, a foundling, an orphan, a canary, or a member of the Democratic Party. He isn't animal, human or vegetable. He's mineral, I suppose.

In fact, he is nothing but a simple, ordinary air-conditioning unit. But bless his honest metal heart, he's all ours—less two payments.

When my wife, Frances, suggested buying an air-conditioning unit last summer, I pointed out the advantages of spending our money on more basic needs—things like bread, shoes, bus fare. She agreed my logic was perfect. And naturally, the next day the air-conditioning unit arrived and was installed.

We nicknamed him "Little Blowhard" and put him in what we call the "keep cool" room.

Last autumn arrived before he got his front radiator grill well chilled. But this year he's created his own indoor climate. That is the trouble with our "keep cool" room. We don't pick the climate. Little Blowhard does.

He's about as hard to predict as the weather outside. We turn the knobs to tell him what we want—and then he just goes ahead and gives us whatever he decides we should have. He likes to play pranks, like a wayward child.

Stormy Weather

IF WE THINK a little fresh air would be nice, Little Blowhard suddenly gets the idea he is a tempest. He huffs and he puffs, and we have to hold on to our chairs to keep from being swept out of the room.

Other times I go to bed with the thermometer reading a cool 70. In the middle of the night I wake up shaking with cold: Little Blowhard has suddenly decided we are playing iceberg. Then I not only have to get a blanket for myself—I have to get one for him, too.

The worst thing about him is that he's an awful showoff. Whenever we take a visitor into our keep cool room, Little Blowhard begins to try to attract attention.

He quits purring and begins to groan, whirr and vibrate his filters. He keeps this up until the visitor says:

"My, Little Blowhard is certainly working hard tonight, isn't he?"

. . . "I not only have to get a blanket for myself—I have to get one for HIM too"

You would think that would be enough credit to satisfy him. Not him. He demands more praise than a ham actor. He clanks and clatters louder and louder until he drowns out the conversation. As soon as the guest leaves, I go over and smack his brown sides and say:

"All right, Blowhard, there's nobody here but the family now—just us folks. Shut up!"

And darned if he doesn't immediately go back to purring. He knows there is no longer any use trying to impress us.

But we no longer think of Little Blowhard as just an air-conditioning unit. He has too much personality and too strong a will of his own. He's one of the family now.

I suppose that's a natural outgrowth of the mechanical age. People begin to think of machines as people—and the machines are acting more and more like people.

Garden Moisture Control

Too Much, Too Little Are Equally Bad

By James H. Beattie

SOIL moisture, cultivation and pest control are closely related factors in the home yard and garden. All these, and others, are essential to the successful growing of fruits, vegetables and ornamentals. But, an adequate, well distributed supply of moisture is absolutely vital. Too much, or too little, are equally bad. However a lot can be done to smooth out the effects of these conditions.

Midsummer is when irrigation is usually of most importance. This season the situation is somewhat different. Drenching rains of almost cloudburst proportions have sometimes created flooding and erosion problems. Many parts of the suburban Washington area have water-use retrictions so it has become a problem of preventing flooding or erosion damage, or should the weather become dry, that of making the best use of the available moisture.

Cultivated areas on slopes of 1½ percent or greater are usually subject to serious erosion during heavy rainstorms. This may be either a more or less unnoticeable form of what may be called sheet erosion, wherein individual raindrops loosen the soil and start it on its way downhill, or it may be what is commonly called washing or gullying.

This may expose the plant roots, wash the plants out of the ground or cover them with soil carried from higher levels. Usually both simple sheet erosion and the more apparent gullying occur at the same time. The problem is more serious with light-textured soils and where there is drainage from higher levels, as on a hillside or in a ravine.

Terraces Hold Water

THE construction of small terraces along the upper edge of the garden and at intervals of 15 to 20 feet across the cultivated area to deflect the water, and hold it for later soaking into the soil is a practical plan for the reduction of damage by washing. This work is usually done before the garden is planted but much can be accomplished at this time without interfering with the growing crops. This applies particularly to the construction of deflecting terraces to keep surplus water off the garden.

Garden terraces should usually follow the contour of the land and the crest of each terrace may be used for planting of perennials such as raspberries, grapes, asparagus and the like. In any case, whether terraces are used, garden rows on hilly land should not run up and down the slope. This type of planting is a direct invitation for erosion.

Too much water packs the soil and interferes with soil aeration and its effects on plant growth are often more serious than those of a moderate drouth. Failure to properly level the ground before planting is liable to cause the formation of pools of water. Such conditions can be corrected by simple ditching.

Under the influence of summer sunshine, garden land dries rapidly even after a heavy rain and lack of moisture is liable to become a serious problem. Because of water-use restrictions and the impracticability of extensive irrigation for the average gardener, most persons are compelled to do what they can in conserving the natural rainfall. These conservation practices supplemented by a limited amount of irrigation, particularly in connection with the starting of seeds and the setting of plants are usually sufficient to produce excellent results.

Cultivation Is Important

THE beneficial effects of a fine soil mulch vary with the type of soil and other factors but a soil mulch usually reduces evaporation and equalizies the temperature of the top soil. A cultivated soil surface absorbs rainfall and irrigation water more readily by retarding run-off. Many gardeners defeat one of the main purposes of cultivation by raking the soil surface smooth. It's a far better practice to leave it somewhat rough.

While the surface around the plants should not be stirred deeply because working would interfere with the roots of the plants, the "middles" should be pock-marked with the corner of the hoe or other tool. These depressions will catch and hold the water until it soaks into the soil. Cultivation should be repeated after every rain just as soon as the soil has dried enough to make the work safe.

An abundance of decomposed organic matter in the soil is of great help in avoiding injury to crops through scanty moisture supplies. This is a long-time remedy that should be practiced in all permanent gardens and in connection with plant growth of all kinds around the yard and home. It works very well in connection with mulches of straw and other materials that finally decay and become incorporated with the soil.

Mulches of various kinds provide an effective means for reducing the temperature of the soil around the plants, for controlling weeds and for conserving soil moisture. As a rule a mulch, such as straw or grass, that soon decays and becomes incorporated with the soil is best. But, for many plants, such as most of the fruits and ornamentals, a more permanent cover is preferable. In these cases sawdust, shavings, paper mulch, aluminum foil and other materials have many points in their favor. In the fruit and vegetable garden a mulch that can be pulled from around the plants during periods of wet weather has many advantages.

Few seasons pass without at least one severe drouth when one or two thorough soakings may save a valuable garden or yard planting. Such facilities as are available must be used. The garden hose is most commonly employed. A thorough soaking now and then, not frequent sprinkling, produces the best results. Evening or night application of the water is the most economical way to use the water but the foliage should be kept dry. Wet foliage at night tends to spread plant diseases.

Stake and Prune Plants for Top Tomato Yield

THE largest crop of tomatoes possible in a given space is grown by staking the plants and pruning each to a single stem. This is easy to do, but not as easy as some beginners may think.

It does not increase the yield per plant, but reduces it. It enables more plants to be grown in small space, climbing instead of spreading out on the ground. But it calls for drastic pruning, as long as the plant develops, and will fail rather messily if this pruning is neglected.

The space saved is indicated by the fact that plants pruned to a single stem can be spaced a foot apart, and double stem plants 21 inches apart, while most plants that lie on the ground require 4 feet each way.

This applies to varieties of normal vine growth, which are the only kind that should be staked and pruned. So-called determinate varieties, of which the stems stop growing after they reach a certain length, while the plant devotes all its energies to ripening the fruit which has set, should never be pruned, and get no benefit from staking, but they may be planted as closely as 18 inches apart, and allowed to spread on the ground. They bear a good early crop, but over a shorter season than the older, later varieties.

Need Constant Attention

KEEPING tomato plants pruned and tied to stakes or a fence needs constant attention. At the joint where each leaf grows on the main stem, a branch will develop, and this must be cut or pinched off before it is 4 inches long, otherwise its removal may weaken the plant. If allowed to grow, secondary branches will develop from it, and soon all effort to keep the plant within bounds will have to be abandoned. A few days' neglect of pruning may spoil the plants.

All side shoots that grow where leaf joins main stem must be pinched off, to prune tomato plants to a single stem

To grow a two-stem plant, select one branch coming from the main stem 10 inches above the surface, and allow that to grow. Both main stem and branch will have to be pruned regularly. Single stem plants can be supported by a heavy cord stretched from a suitable tall support, and anchored to the ground near the plant. The stem as it grows can be twisted about the cord.

Two-stem plants may be tied with soft twine, strips of cloth, raffia or special ties made of wire imbedded in paper strips. Use a loose loop around the stem, to avoid constriction, or cutting.

Tomatoes require full sun and regular watering. When the soil is allowed to dry out, with fruit set, a black decay spot known as "blossom-end rot" may develop on the fruit. Watering during the dry spells will prevent this. When fruit begins to mature, plant food worked into the soil around the plant, using a tablespoonful at a time, will help produce more and larger fruit.

Tomato roots spread out near the surface and should never be disturbed. Never cultivate deep enough to touch them; a heavy mulch of straw or lawn clippings about each plant is better than cultivation, and helps keep the soil moist.

A Summer Crop

Soy Beans Enrich Soil Even More Than Rye

By Alfred Puts

BECAUSE of the cost of organic matter the compost heap has gained much favor. But even if every bit of suitable material is put on it, there never seems to be enough to go around. Winter cover crops of rye or annual rye grass also are becoming more popular. They are another good, cheap way of adding humus to the soil.

Taking their cue from good farming practices, some gardeners are calling on soybeans in their struggle for a good supply of humus-forming materials. Soybeans are a summer crop and therefore can be used only where the area is not in use between early May and early September.

They are sown after danger of severe frost is past, but not later than the middle of June, to be plowed under six to eight weeks later, but before the seedpods have reached full size. Where they have to be spaded under, do not let them grow more than 8 inches tall, to avert a back-breaking job.

Soy beans are better than rye or rye grass as soil improvers, for they are legumes.

Spade Soil Deeply

ANOTHER good trait of soybeans is their ability to grow fairly well on poor soil, but to get the most out of them the soil should not only be spaded deeply and prepared carefully but receive an application of a complete 4-12-4 or 5-10-5 fertilizer at the rate of 4 pounds for each 100 square feet.

Because one cannot tell whether the proper bacteria are present in the soil they should be provided as a bacterial culture.

Just add the powder to the seed, shake vigorously until all seeds are coated and sow in the usual way. You need not be concerned about the variety of seed so long as it is an early one; the edible kinds will do as well.

One pound of seed is ample for 400 square feet. Broadcast the seed evenly over the surface and work lightly into the soil with a cultivator. If it looks like dry weather for some time, compact the surface to bring the seeds into close contact with the soil. That way they can absorb moisture better as the first requirement to germination.

Acts Like a Sponge

ONE would have to have a big pile of compost to accomplish what a soybean crop will do, and it would take more time and harder work.

Why so much fuss about organic matter? The answer: Plants cannot grow without it. It acts like a sponge, holding water and dissolved plant food yet opens up the soil so that air can enter freely.

Humus is far from permanent. It lasts longer where seasons are cool than in hot climates. In this section most of it has disintegrated after the second or third year. In nature the supply is automatically replenished by dead roots and the accumulation of plant refuse.

Under garden conditions most of this material is removed, even the greater part of the roots.

The greater the humus supply at the beginning of planting the better the chances for prolonged benefits, for it encourages a heavy root growth.

Soybeans serve especially well where a new lawn is to be made in the fall. In that case they should be turned under not later than early August so that the soil can settle for a month before the grass is sown.

Do not neglect the regular fertilizer application before sowing the lawn.

2 Ways

How to Keep Corn at Hand All Summer

THERE are two ways to obtain a long harvest of sweet corn. Make several plantings of an early variety, or plant at the same time three or four varieties, which mature one after the other.

When hybrid sweet corn is used, the latter method is popular. Hybrid sweet corn varieties tend to mature more uniformly than the open pollinated varieties, giving a shorter harvest season. By planting four varieties, maturing in 60, 70, 80 and 90 days, or thereabouts, a harvest of six weeks may be obtained.

Similar results might be had by making four sowings of an early variety, about 10 days apart. But for a fall crop it will usually be found best to sow a late variety, taking 80 to 90 days to mature, as the early types seldom do as well in the fall weather. Late varieties are usually taller, have larger ears and yield more heavily than the earlies.

In sections where the European corn borer has become established, it is necessary to kill or outwit this pest, in order to harvest a full crop. The moth which lays eggs of this insect emerges from winter quarters when the weather is warm, and early planted corn is about 3 feet tall. Eggs are laid on the underside of the corn leaves, or the leaves of a plant having "grassy" leaves similar to corn. Oats, gladioli and many other plants may be chosen as egg bearers.

Insects Eat on Leaf

WHEN insects hatch out on corn plants they eat along the leaf, making their way toward the stalk, and enter the stalk where the leaf joins it, or climb to the top and eat into the tassel. To protect the corn, after the eggs have been laid, it is necessary to kill the insects before they enter the stalk. The best treatment is to dust them with 5 percent DDT. Repeat this in 10 days, as a minimum protection. It is better to dust four times, five days apart.

To outwit the corn borer, the first planting may be delayed 10 days to two weeks until other plants are tall enough to attract the egg layers. Those who plan to try this method should seek the advice of their county agricultural advisors as to the best dates for planting.

Sweet corn is usually planted in drills, with plants spaced 8 to 18 inches apart, and rows 2 to 3 feet apart, depending on the height of the variety. Fertilizer should be applied in shallow trenches on both sides of the row, as with other vegetables. Since the roots are close to the surface, cultivation should always be shallow. Seed should be covered an inch deep in early planting, 2 inches when the soil is dry.

To assist pollination, at least four rows of corn should be planted at a time, making the rows short, and dividing the space into blocks, if necessary. When the wind blows pollen from a single row of corn, much of it is wasted, but in blocks, whichever way the wind blows pollen will fall on adjoining plants. Each silk must be touched by pollen to produce a kernel.

Arranging Cut Flowers Takes Skillful Hand

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

FLOWER shows and tours have been many and lovely this year. While rain has often dampened the spirits and lessened the attendance, the flowers themselves have been exceptionally fine and the arrangements have shown that the exhibitors have added to their skill from year to year.

The enjoyment of cut flowers is greatly increased by knowing how to handle them properly. An "arrangement" is not always necessary, but with even the simplest affair a knowledge of how to handle the flowers so that they will last longer, the selection of a container and proper type of holder are all highly important points. Steadiness and balance are particularly vital in summer when a sudden breeze arises, a curtain blows or a door is slammed. The novice gathers many valuable points by seeing arrangements made by experts and by visiting shows and floral exhibits.

Conference Held

AN INTERESTING all-day "garden conference" was recently sponsored by the Eastpines Garden Club of Riverdale. A member club of the Federated Garden Clubs of Maryland, this newly formed organization had a most valuable program covering many features of horticulture as the use of flowers for home beautifying.

The conference was held in the old Calvert Mansion, now owned by the Maryland Park and Planning Commission. The fine old house was beautified by many flower arrangements.

An innovation was "audible judging," a discussion by the judges before the members on the good and bad points of every entry. This should be a popular feature for many of the newer clubs. Exhibitors generally are anxious to know the reasons why their entry did not merit an award when another close by and seemingly no more lovely—won top honors. There are certain rules which judges more or less have to follow and written comments by judges are always welcome. Audible judging makes many points clear to the novice which will assist in making future flower arrangements for home as well as for show purposes.

Mrs. Benton Speaks

PERIOD and modern flower arrangement was demonstrated by members of the Maryland Federation and various talks touched on pressed flower pictures, Junior Garden Clubs and their programs, mid-summer gardening, prize-winning flower pictures and Maryland birds and their calls.

Mrs. Luther Benton, president of the Maryland Federation, spoke on the importance of legislation for roadside control and conservation and said the 67 clubs banded together in Maryland have played an important part in passing helpful legislation as well as joining with the national organization with its great "prestige, strength and power" which it uses to keep America beautiful.

Seven Chosen

WASHINGTON flower shows are generally conceded to be among the best in the country. Through the years there has developed a widespread knowledge of flower arrangement which lends interest and beauty to the shows and exhibits.

Seven women from the Washington area were recently chosen to make 35 flower arrangements at the Flower Festival held in the Jackson and Perkins gardens at Newark, N. J. Chosen were Mrs. Charles Peace, flower show chairman of the Federated Garden Clubs of Maryland; Mrs. Floyd Smith of Silver Spring; Mrs. Herbert Gregor and Mrs. Emmanuel Smith of Washington; Mrs. Frank Ball of Arlington and Mrs. Lomax Tayloe of Fairfax.

The arrangements were made for "Flower Arrangers Day" when 700 members of garden clubs from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania were asked to visit the gardens. Many of the new roses were on display and were used in the arrangements. A new note was the lavender Pinocchio. This was used in an arrangement with purple pansies, lavender phlox, the foliage of cut beech and Golden Scepter, a new 1951 rose of great beauty. Opera, another new rose, was used together with Crimson Glory and Donald Prior. Opera is a hybrid tea, red with a golden overglow. Fashion was selected for many arrangements and gives promise of being a garden favorite in Washington following its featured planting at the national show and its prize winning possibilities demonstrated at many of the smaller, more recent shows.

Helpful Tip

Ivy Perils To Travelers Set Forth

"IF YOU'RE an Eskimo or a new-born baby you won't have to worry about ivy poisoning this summer."

George R. Hammond, safety and education director, D. C. division, American Automobile Association, says every one has an allergy to poison ivy except young babies and Eskimos.

"Motorists and vacationists are urged to watch out for this poisonous growth in the woods and along roadsides, as there is no general immunity; and poison ivy is to be found in abundance in every State in the Union except California and Nevada," he explained.

The theory that, once a case of poison ivy has been suffered there is a degree of immunization, has long since been debunked. Actually, according to both forestry experts and medical men, once a person does contract poison ivy he will get it easier each time he is exposed, and the more severe his attack will become each time.

The A.A.A. club official suggested teaching children the adage regarding "Leaflets three, let it be!"

"Poison ivy," said Hammond, "looks like most any ivy vine, but its leaves branch off in threes, on stout, rather long stalks. The young leaves are crinkly and jagged-edged, becoming glistening or shiny in summer. In the fall they turn temptingly to a beautiful orange or scarlet."

From Leaf Miner

Now's Time To Protect Holly Trees

NOW IS the time to protect holly trees and shrubs against the destructive holly leaf miner.

One and two-year old leaves on many hollies have turned yellow or exhibit disfiguring blackish spots. This is leaf miner damage.

Maggots of the miner will emerge from inside the leaves within the next few weeks as a fly, similar to the common house fly in appearance but a third its size, according to Dr. Stanley W. Bromley, entomologist of the Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories.

The fly will feed on the underside of new leaves for a week to 10 days, puncturing as many as 100 or more tiny holes in a single leaf. These punctures may be seen on last year's holly leaves which have turned yellow as a result.

The fly lays its eggs in a new leaf, usually on one that has not been riddled by adult feeding. Larvae from these eggs then feed within the leaf tissues late in the fall and early next spring.

Best control, Dr. Bromley reports, is to spray hollies with a contact insecticide when the young leaves are a half inch to three-fourths of an inch long.

Club Activities

THE Neighborhood Garden Club of Arlington will meet in Mount Olivet Methodist Church, N. Glebe rd. and 16th st., at 8 p. m. tomorrow. A question and answer period will follow an important business session.

THE speaker on today's Bethesda-Chevy Chase Harvest Show broadcast at 1:15 p. m. over WBCC will be Mrs. W. O. Husted, president of the Metropolitan African Violet Society. She will speak with particular reference to exhibiting African violets in the September Harvest Show.

Cut Asparagus Early

Don't cut the asparagus too late if you expect an equally good crop next year. Give it a dress of plant food when you stop cutting.

Use Sharp Knife

Use a sharp knife when cutting flowers, in order not to bruise the stems.

Rose Society Creates Memorial To McFarland

A MEMORIAL to honor the late Dr. J. Horace McFarland is being sponsored by the American Rose Society. Dr. McFarland was internationally known for his interest in civic improvement, as a pioneer in the field of photography and color printing, and for popularizing amateur rose growing as a rich and absorbing hobby.

To commemorate him as a rosarian, horticulturist and humanitarian, a group of Perpetual Challenge Trophies to be awarded for outstanding achievement at rose shows is being made possible through contributions from members of the American Rose Society and special friends of Dr. McFarland.

The trophies will be sculptured bronze plaques. One will be awarded at a national rose show each year and similar ones will be made available to each district of the American Rose Society for use at district shows or comparable events.

More Built-in Furniture Being Used in Homes

THE DEMAND for compact storage convenience in homes has given great impetus to built-in furniture. Shelves, cupboards and closets with storage space beneath are often features of the standard equipment offered by builders to house buyers.

Built-in pantry closets are a recent addition to kitchens. They consist of tall, double-door closets with shallow shelves that make it easy to reach all articles stored there. Along the bottom, small bins are provided for vegetables.

The insides of the doors have narrow shelves with slats along the lower edge to hold package foods, condiments and cook books. Horizontal racks and hooks take care of kitchen knives, small pans and their covers.

Providing sideboard storage space in many dining rooms are tall, double door closets which flank a set of low drawers. The space above the drawers is often mirrored and affords a place for flowers or family heirloom silver. The built-in cabinets give ample room for silver, table linen, and the "best" dinner china as well as luncheon and tea sets.

In some new homes in one of New York's large suburban developments, shelves and cupboards beside the hearth are built in to accommodate radio, television and phonograph equipment as well as books. Included also is a space for firewood. These installments are frequently given blond, pine or maple finishes in contrast to painted walls.

In bedrooms—along one wall—built-in closets are often installed. Some have tall closets for women's gowns and shorter ones for men's attire. The space thus saved is devoted to shallow drawers or pull-out trays for small articles. A dressing table, formed by a low set of drawars with a mirror above, is part of this installation.

More storage space in bathrooms is now obtained by building enclosed shelves under the wash basin. A more extensive storage arrangement consists of a built-in counter extending on both sides of the basin, similar to the working surface by a kitchen sink.

The space below is useful for a laundry bin. On either end of the counter, flanking the basin with its mirror, are tall, narrow medicine cabinets and open shelves.

In many of the built-in closets, the space extending from the top of the door to the ceiling contains small cupboards for the storage of little used articles.

Some built-in units are constructed of walnut and other hard woods and have modern drawer fronts that omit the usual metal pulls. These are opened by concealed hand holds at the ends. On others, there are large square wooden pulls or smaller round ones.

Product Previews

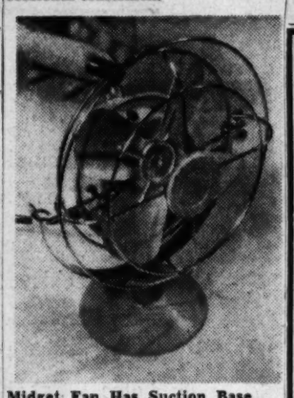
THIS PLEASANT PICTURE comes to you through the courtesy of the manufacturers of the Broadweve screen, which same is making it possible for the young lady to "enjoy sun and privacy in her own back yard." While the screen makes a handsome outdoor accessory, as you can see, it is readily adaptable to indoor use. It's available at Lansburgh & Bro. and Goldenberg's department stores.

JUVENILE fishermen who tag along with dad can have their own eight-piece kit of fishing rod and tackle. The rod is 26 inches long and of high carbon spring steel. There are a reel, two hooks, sinker and ball float to help Junior lure the fish.

MOISTURE absorbing crystals hung in a closet will help prevent mildew and musty odors in clothing. A window in the package reveals the state of the crystals. If they are blue, humidity is satisfactory. If crystals are pink, they have become moisture saturated and should be dried out in the sun or oven.

WATER toy for adults and children is a six-foot inflatable wheel of Vinylite plastic. Ladder steps around the side create a variety of possibilities for competitive sport as the wheel rolls about. Turned over flat in the water, the wheel becomes a float. Bill-Buoy is the name.

WOODCRAFT hobbyists can buy kits of ready-cut pieces of rare veneers for making inlaid pictures. There is a choice of eight scenes. Complete directions for assembly are included. The company carries an extensive line of all the available woods and tools and direction booklets for both amateur and professional craftsmen.



Midget Fan Has Suction Base

SUCTION base on a lightweight and powerful 6-inch fan permits the unit to be used in small spaces on nonporous table or wall surfaces. The swivel mounted fan guard can be adjusted to any desired angle.

BARBECUE grill for outdoors or the indoor fireplace has a deep iron firebox made to burn coal, wood or charcoal. It is 7½ inches deep and the grill of galvanized steel can be extended 10 inches higher for slow cooking. Both grill and grate are removable for cleaning.

Tea Strainer Has Own Drip Cup

SENSIBLE strainer for tea drinkers who prefer tea leaves loose in the teapot is a tiny brass mesh strainer in a stainless steel frame that swivels over a stainless drip cup. The handle turns the strainer over the teacup or swings it back to its own drip-catcher stand.

Most of the above items are not yet on the market. For names and addresses of manufacturers, send this coupon and a 3c stamp to the Home Institute, 230 West 41st St., New York 18, N. Y.

Summer Hazards

Parents should teach their children to be safety-minded this summer in addition to taking necessary physical precautions to prevent home accidents, the National Safety Council warns. Pointing out that children are relatively safe in school, the Council explained that the vacation months take the highest accident toll of youngsters.

Pamphlet Tells What to do About Condensation

MODERN living habits, along with new types of construction, have contributed to the condensation difficulties of many homes, according to a pamphlet issued by the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

These difficulties arise principally by the humidity, HHFA says. To reduce humidity, trays and pans should be drained, laundry dried out of doors or in a well ventilated space, basements and crawl spaces should be checked for sources of moisture.

The pamphlet is based in part upon results of research conducted at Pennsylvania State College under the sponsorship of the HHFA. It is available from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at 10 cents a copy.

FHA Small Homes Program Termed 'Significant'

THE SMALL homes program under the Federal Housing Administration promises to be one of the most significant provisions of the Housing Act of 1950, according to Herbert C. Redman, FHA assistant commissioner.

This program, he explains, makes it possible to finance low-cost homes for a mass market that has been neglected in recent years. The property requirements do not include the more expensive interior finishes and equipment, and the program is particularly suited to small communities, suburban and rural areas, he adds.

Under it, mortgages may not exceed $4750 or 95 percent of FHA-appraised value of property for the owner-occupant.

'Peep Show' Still Packs 'Em In, Despite Scolding by Critic

BROADWAY SHOWBOAT:

Stage entrance: M. Todd's "Peep Show" romped into the No. 1 spot for "hottest ticket in town" despite Broadway's most humid week . . . The scoldings by Critic J. Chapman, for its sinfulness, (reprinted in Time) may have helped . . . Such champions as "South Pacific" and "The Wisteria Trees" (starring Helen Hayes) suffered from the weather and "Tickets Please" nose-dived at the box-office, too . . . But "Peep Show" had more standees than its competitors had patrons . . . As some sage said long ago, "You can outlaw sin but you will never make it unpopular" . . . S. Goldwyn met Betta St. John of "S. Pacific" (she renders "Happee Talkee Talk" so delightfully) in the Stork Club and invited her to do a test . . . She is signed with the show until June, 1951 . . . After running 33 weeks, "Texas, Li'l Darlin" recovered just one-third of its cost . . . The American National Theater and Academy was formed for the purpose of bringing American plays by American authors with American actors to the American people. Also to give an opportunity to unknown players . . . "Getting Married" was the first play to be presented. The author is George Bernard Shaw, non-Yankee. It went into full retreat in Los Angeles after a run of a dozen days. It was written by an Irishman-Britisher, with not one American in the cast and each a star, no less.

WINCHELL

THE Cinemagicians: Dana Andrews and Gene Tierney give "Where the Sidewalk Ends" its gamut power . . . "Operation Airlift" salutes the Air Force's 4-mile-a-minute-men . . . 'The Good Humor Man" has Jack Carson offering some tutti-fruititti buffoonery, but many of the quips have frozen beards . . . "The Eagle and the Hawk" shows John Payne and his six-shooter being mowed down by Rhonda Fleming's sex-shooting . . . "Marshal of Heldorado" is hardly worth a polished insult.

THE Airistocrats: "Correspondents Scratchpad" (CBS) is a welcome item. The newsmen submit behind-the-scenes information which helps you decipher the jigsaw of current events . . . A. Godfrey's Wednesday nighter was one of his aces . . . Joan

Big Audience

Rash's Pants Look Great On Video

By Sonia Stein

WHEN BRYSON RASH takes over for vacationing Walter Kiernan on the ABC network these next two weeks, he may seem like a new personality to the audience outside of Washington. But actually most people have heard him from time to time on special events shows broadcast and telecast from Washington, and some of them have seen the seat of his pants, in full camera range, the day it was introduced as the President of the United States.

This much-cherished incident in the annals of TV occurred not long ago when Bryson, considerate of President Truman's reputation for neatness, leaned across the table to adjust his crooked tie—not quite in the nick of time.

Normally, Bryson-on-the-air is no comic, since normally Bryson is a purveyor of hard news, and ABC's voice which says, "Ladies and Gentlemen, the President of the United States." At 36, he already has—and has had for some time—a pair of grave, gray patches at the temples and a pleasant but dignified voice. And his new assignment, the Monday through Friday five minute spot on WMAL-ABC (3:25 p. m.), will not be in the Kiernan, or light, vein. In view of the war situation in Korea, ABC is planning to use straight news on the situation as relayed by Bryson from the White House, an old stamping ground of his. (He is ABC White House correspondent, and director of special events, and was on leave as director of radio for the Democratic National Committee in 1946.).

In addition to the news, Bryson hopes to squeeze into that five minutes (less commercials) some one-minute character sketches on White House personnel, including "Hacky" Hackmeister, the telephone operator; the President's chauffeur, and the presidential secretaries.

To do these shows will be practically a one-finger-one-thumb

A Luxury Airplane, for Free

Aviation Loves Godfrey—It's Mutual

By Jack O'Brian

"EVERYBODY," says Arthur Godfrey almost every week, and sometimes many times each week to his 40-million-plus listeners, "should learn to fly."

"It can't be too hard," he adds, a laugh lighting up his warm, familiar baritone. "After all, if I could learn anyone can."

Just that sort of constant, sincere, tenacious personal promotion on the air waves by Arthur Godfrey, most popular radio and television entertainer of the era, has turned itself into the greatest single bit of propaganda the aviation industry now has going for it.

"Arthur has done more to make the public air-minded than any single person since Charles Lindbergh," one top aviation executive said recently.

Eddie Rickenbacker, president of Eastern Airlines and one of Godfrey's closest, oldest personal friends, is a man noted for his conservative, tempered, thoroughly thought-out public gestures in any instance.

But the famed World War I ace finds himself constantly talking about Godfrey in terms he usually reserves for the aviation industry itself.

Just this week Rickenbacker's opinions on the subject of Arthur Godfrey, aviator and unofficial press agent for the entire aviation industry, recently took an impressively tangible turn.

Now a lieutenant-commander in the U. S. Naval Reserve, Godfrey's been flying almost 30 years and during most of that time has devoted a high percentage of his public speaking to selling the safety, convenience and time-saving qualities of air travel.

Rickenbacker, speaking several times for the industry, has said there is no way to properly repay Godfrey for his sincerely enthusiastic help.

Gift of a DC-3

Godfrey recently became the owner of the finest item Rickenbacker and his associates in the aviation industry could put their hand on.

It was a big Eastern Wright-powered DC-3, converted to Godfey's private use at the behest and expense of the industry. It was a gift unprecedented either in the history of aviation or the entertainment world!

It is no desk-size ornament, but a fully equipped former air ship that delivered 21 passengers at a time in its days as a common carrier. It is worth $125,000, loaded from wing tip to tip and from nose to tail with the finest, safest, most luxurious effects ever seen in any such private airborne vehicle.

The DC-3 finished its "executive conversion" at the plant of Remmert-Werner, Inc., in St. Louis. William Remmert himself flew the plane to Godfrey then in Washington.

Luxurious Cabin

THE luxurious cabin is the first thing that strikes your eye, virtually a living room aloft.

The ship seats 14, not including its captain—Arthur Godfrey, of course—or its first officer, Capt. Frank La Vigna, of Philadelphia.

Four stationary chairs are set around a table—gin rummy, Canasta, whatever the Godfrey guests prefer.

At the rear is an observation lounge seating six, with a semi-circular couch and a coffee table in front, its top a laminated air chart of the U. S.

The lounge end looks out windows a foot high and three feet long. Four other swivel chairs keep a visitor turned in any direction he prefers. There is a desk, with a telephone on it, for business, or for just writing letters. Yes, the telephone works. Call your office on the way from Washington to New York, or have someone call you. Also a telephone connection between the lounge and the cabin up front. Switches for various modern gadgets also are on the desk, and at the side are two divans that make up into a brace of full-length beds.

Built-in Television

A TELEVISION SET is built in, and there's a motion picture projector in case all else fails and a lull descends.

Hungry? There's a thoroughly equipped galley to serve regular home-style meals. Nothing else to do after dinner? Just tune in the regular plane-to-ground radio calls via the cabin's loudspeakers. After that, I guess everyone's on his own.

Up front is the part of the ship Arthur is most proud of. The instrument panel is lighted by modern plastic methods. Its maze of fine equipment includes a "zero reader" which combines the findings of the instrument landing system into one "cross-hair." The vertical cross-hair keeps Godfrey on course. The horizontal hirsute line tells him whether he's too high or too low.

There's also an automatic pilot which virtually flies the ship by itself.

Dual instrumentation permits Captains Godfrey and La Vigna to see what's cooking without reading over each other's shoulder. Everything in the ship is for Godfrey's comfort, convenience and safety. It's the second private plane to be protected by nonflammable hydraulic liquid called "Skydrol," the first being a plane owned by the Monsanto Chemical Co., which makes the liquid.

Despite its 10 years and 44,000 miles of service, the DC-3 is "new" by passenger aviation standards, having been knocked down and every single piece in it rebuilt from tires to tail.

Speechless, for Once

ACQUISITION of such a tremendous private ship had Godfrey understandably speechless. Probably for the first time.

Nothing so fabulous ever crossed his young mind when, a boy in Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., he spent many an hour nearby at the skimpy 600-foot runway of what now is Teterboro Air Terminal, but then just an adventurous home base for men later to become the greats of early aviation.

By complete coincidence, Teterboro also is the air terminal where Godfrey keeps his Navion plane in which he flies back and forth to his Virginia farm, and where he also will park his new DC-3.

In those days it was simply called Teterboro, the local heroes were Clarence Chamberlain, Bill Diehl and the Witteman brothers. And although all this flying was going on right in his own Hasbrouck back yard, just a few hundred feet away, Arthur didn't go personally into the Wild Blue Yonder until he joined the Navy in 1920.

The shaky beginning of his 30 years of exciting belief in the air industry began on an ornery old F5L flying boat.

Weekends at Home

FLYING such antiquated buzzards frequently left a passenger in shape for nothing more modern than an oxcart, but Godfrey wasn't a backward-looking citizen and has been flying ever since. His hand has been on the stick of every sort of plane and he has the expected commercial license. His modern thinking is filled with nostalgia occasionally when he tells how that same old F5L flying boat now is in the Smithsonian in Washington.

Commercial aviation has felt the Godfrey propaganda in its ticket sales since, about 17 years ago, the redhead flew from New York to Miami in an old giant Curtiss Condor, a twin-engine job with a wing spread almost large enough to span the Hudson. But its non-stop flight to Miami was history of a sort, and sold Arthur even further on passenger air travel.

On Record Flight

GODFREY also was on the first Constellation delivered to Eastern Airlines—his particular pet line because of "Capt." Eddie—when Capt. Dick Merrill broke the trans-continental speed record for commercial airlines on the hop from Burbank, Calif., to New York City.

Nothing was too modern for Godfrey. He's hepped on everything from gliders to helicopters. He hasn't learned to fly an "eggbeater" yet but he gets around in them on occasions.

Not long ago he and James Viner of Sikorsky Aircraft were rotoring their way through Maryland in a Sikorsky F-51 when they were set down by a thunderstorm. They picked a convenient, unoccupied expanse of nicely-tended grass and only on landing did they discover they were on the infield of Laurel Racetrack.

What appeared from aloft to be a deserted slice of geography turned out to be a track in the final bustle of the betting day, with few on hand because of the rain, and what few had turned out huddled back under the grandstand where they could take a bath in the betting windows without getting too wet literally.

Won on Race

ONE race remained to be run and Godfrey, certainly not a man to pass up that opportunity dug down, bought a scratch sheet, did some quick calculation and got in line at the mutuel window. The storm ended just as the horses were pounding into the final furlong, and Godfrey and Viner waited around to collect their bet—yep, they won!

While no airplane actually frightens Godfrey, he does put some restriction on his enthusiasm. Recently he took over the controls of a T-33 "Shooting Star" jet plane at Bolling Field Air Base and pronounced it the most exciting experience of his life aloft. Would he buy one for himself, he was asked?

"Oh no!" he exclaimed, using a switch on the words of the song he made so famous:

"I don't want it, you can have it—it's too fast for me!"

Lesson for Producers

Citronella Loop's Big League Now

By Richard L. Coe

THIS WEEK finds the citronella circuit in full tilt.

In a masterly job of editorial labor a few weeks ago the New York Times drama section listed 176 summer theaters from Maine to North Carolina on the Eastern Seaboard. Not all these, to be sure, are Equity-staffed, and some of the ones which are do not necessarily insure all-round professional competence.

But what a far cry it is from the timid summers of the thirties. What was a lark has become big business; for some players it's become the only time they cash in on their wares. Some producers parlay the 10 summer weeks into winter nest eggs.

To be provincial about it, our Olney is at the top of the heap, lumped in with the Cape and the Falmouth, Bucks County and Westport. Consider the fact that those four are in summer resort areas and that Olney is supported by working urbanites, despite Maxine Davis' unforgettable Holiday article on our town as a summer heaven. One wonders whether the wintertime producers will take a lesson from this about Washingtonians as playgoers.

Olney also epitomizes the shift summer stock has taken. Although its creator, Steve Cochran, determined on a star policy, the war put an end to his efforts. When Evelyn Freyman, Redge Allen and Glenn Taylor took over the theater after the war they tried a season of non-name stock. The bait wasn't enough for the 20-mile drive. Then they took to the star system, importing a name player for their resident stock company. The names got brighter, their draw bigger and their percentage higher. The first-rank star policy found the theater paying out $1000 to $5000 per personality; the supporting company worked through most of the summer.

Such was the pattern of the other leading barns on the scythe circuit. This year a tendency of last season has asserted itself more sharply: the "package show."

And it is a package show of promise we will have with us this week, Lillian Gish and her company in "Miss Mabel," by R. C. Sheriff, who wrote "Journey's End," being tried out for Broadway production in the fall.

Coming bills are also oh this star-cum-support basis: Maurice Evans in "The Devil's Disciple," which he will take out to Colorado's Central City; Luise Rainer in Ibsen's "Lady from the Sea," which she will contribute to Sam Wanamaker's festival of summer plays on Broadway and Franchot Tone in Behrman's "The Second Man," which Director Jean Dalrymple now speaks of as first for her fall New York agenda.

There are, of course, drawbacks to this system which seems to be the most profitable of summer tricks. The players no longer have the often profitable experience of learning how to play a variety of roles and we, for instance, have not been able to enjoy the promising art of such folk as June Dayton, or the personality of Dean Harens or the others who've become local favorites. It's been good to have the able Donald Foster with us lately and though some other Olney faces are listed for this week, they won't be around much longer.

But the benefit, it seems to me, of more practiced performances by star-led ensemble groups is certainly for the audience. Without the stars, some productions would have been impossible and when the stars are at their best, as some have been at Olney, you're getting a $4.80 show for $3.

They're Trying

JUST how this can be adapted to winter purposes has been on the minds of the leading summer impresarios. Bucks County's Theron Bamberger and William Miles of Stockbridge discussed possibilities last winter at the University of Deleware's theater conference and one wishes they could overcome the more immediate problems of unions, transportation and in-town theaters. But it's cheering to know they're trying, for they and their fellows in the Stock Managers' Association have made some headway at scattered points.

The price you pay for your ticket is important, they realize, and it is to Olney's credit that despite upped Equity requirements they've not gone above the $3 top. The same show Richard Skinner and Mrs. Freyman are offering here costs about a buck more on the Cape.

Another aspect of the summer circuit is the increased use of plays thought unlikely prospects a few years back. Olney will have given us two Shaws and one Ibsen by the time Labor Day arrives.

Running Out

THE insistent observer may come to the conclusion that the inclusion of these neo-classics also has its practical basis. The boys are running out of plays.

Last summer, for instance, in Eastern Seaboard summer theaters alone, there were 26 separate productions of "The Heiress" and "For Love or Money," 22 for "The Philadelphia Story," 21 for "Blithe Spirit" and "John Loves Mary." In an immensely revealing booklet edited by Richard Beckhard and John Effrat for ANTA ("Blueprint for Summer Theater, 1950 Supplement," John Richard Press, 139 West 44th st. New York 18, $1.25) these and other practical aspects are considered.

How the summer is faring for the mass of gingham houses it's too early to tell, but one point is clear: summer playgoing is all over the map and is here to stay. Providing the playwrights can keep up with the demand.

Lillian Gish Begins New Play Tuesday

LILLIAN GISH, admired by stage and screen audiences the world over, returns to the stage of the Olney Theater Tuesday night in a new play by England's R. C. Sheriff, "Miss Mabel."

LILLIAN GISH
. . . next stop: France

Although her name is inextricably linked with the immortal David Wark Griffith and "The Birth of a Nation," Miss Gish remains an immensely busy and stimulating personality. Last summer she covered the theatrical capitals of Europe for Theater Arts Monthly.

And while she is to appear in "Miss Mabel" this fall on Broadway, she first will journey to France for the film version of "Crime and Punishment." Miss Gish will have the role she played a year ago on the New York stage with John Gielgud. After its completion she returns to "Miss Mabel" in New York.

In recent years Miss Gish has been seen in "Duel in the Sun" and "Portrait of Jenny," though her fame will always rest on the film version of "The Clansman," "Broken Blossoms," "Orphans of the Storm" and "The White Sister." On the stage her most notable roles were in "Within the Gates," "The Star Wagon" and as Ophelia to Gielgud's "Hamlet."

The star's supporting company is headed by three men well known for their character delineations, Charles Francis, Harry Bannister and Wallis Clark. Others in the company under Arthur Sircum's direction include Gwen Anderson, Porter Van Zandt, Victor Beecroft, Sallie Brophy, Marie Carroll, Bethell Long and Mark Roberts.

Olney performances are given Tuesday through Sunday evenings, with Saturday and Sunday matinees. The downtown box office is in Jordan's, 13th and G sts. nw.

Stuart Erwin tonight completes his run in "Harvey."

'Rain' Entering Second Week

"RAIN" is pleasing the Cross Roads Theater, but it's not the weather. It's the play John Colton and Clemence Randolph made from Somerset Maugham's short story of the same name.

Ethel Casey has the starring role in this story of a shady lady in the south seas and a missionary who falls under her spell. John Stanley plays the Rev. Davidson, with Joan Coppock as Mrs. Davidson.

The drama begins its second week at the Virginia barn theater Tuesday night, with the closing set for Saturday.

Others in the cast, under direction of Cecil Willis, include Anne Brooks, Harlow Weller, Betty Rhame, Garry Phillips, Patrick J. Collins, Dabney Waring, William McClellan, Dick O'Neil, Jenifter Barton and Bob Huey.

Postponed 'H. C. W.' Next at Collingwood

Postponed by the holdover week of "They Knew What They Wanted," Tuesday night will bring the opening of "Heaven Can Wait" at the open-air Collingwood Theater on the Mount Vernon highway.

In the cast of this comedy which the movies knew as "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," will be Fran Benton, Eugene Marlo, Lee Bergere, Natalie Priest, Edmund Jordan, James Van Wart, Henry Williamson, Byron Rash, Edmund Montgomery, Robert Eckel, Patience Winthrop and Helen Amendola.

Fulbright Play Awards Are Still Available

TALENTED young Americans with experience in acting, stage production and directing will once again have the opportunity to study and work abroad on U. S. Government scholarships under Public Law 584 (the Fulbright Act.)

Awards for the 1951-52 academic year will be made to qualified graduate students interested in attending theatre schools or working with renowned repertory groups abroad.

Applicants must be citizens of the United States at the time of application, and have adequate knowledge of the language of the country in which they wish to study. They must also have a B. A. degree or its equivalent in professional training by the time they take up their awards. Competitions are keen, and only serious and well qualified persons should apply.

Awards provide transportation, tuition and maintenance for an academic year. The countries with which educational exchange arrangements are now in effect are Australia, Austria, Belgium and Luxembourg, Burma, Egypt, France, Greece, India, Iran, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippine Islands, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

Applicants who will be enrolled at an institution of higher learning in the fall of 1950 must apply through the Fulbright Program Adviser on their campus for information and application forms prior to the closing of the competition, October 31, 1950.

Applicants who are not enrolled should write directly to the Institute of International Education, 2 West 45th st., New York 19, N. Y., before October 15.

City Drama Program Continues Thursday

The District Recreation Department continues its July and August Thursday night entertainments at Roosevelt Center, 13th and Upshur sts., this week with a comedy by Ronald Elwy Mitchell, "A Rogue in Bed."

The Masquers of Roosevelt Center, under the direction of Pauline Eaton Oak, present these short plays weekly during the summer, as well as music and specialty numbers.

In the event of rain, the programs are held indoors instead of in the open-air court, which gives its name to these "Court Programs."

Arena Stage Selects 8 as Playing Core

THE Washington Arena Stage, for which the old Hippodrome Theater is being remodeled, will open Wednesday, August 16, with a play yet to be announced.

The air-conditioned theater is being completely redesigned for this central-staging project under the management of Edward Mangum.

A permanent resident company will open the 48-week season. Five men and three women were selected from 150 applicants on the basis of their ability to play a wide range of roles.

Dorothea Jackson, now a Takoma Park resident, will have leading ingenue roles. Her professional acting background includes roles in "Portrait in Black" and "Three's a Family."

Ionia Zelenka will play the heavier, dramatic feminine leads. She has been seen to advantage in Catholic University productions of "Arms and the Man," "Androcles and the Lion" and "Jenny Kissed Me."

Character woman for the company will be Virginia Thurston, a Washington resident who has an impressive background with the West Virginia community theaters.

The chief male roles in Arena Stage productions will go to Henry Danilowicz, Lester Rawlins, Forrest Monroe, Henry Oliver and Stuart Smith.

Danilowicz, tennis pro of the Congressional Country Club, was a forthright Noah for the George Washington University Players last winter and Rawlins comes from the Carnegie Tech drama school. He's played "Richard III" under B. Iden Payne and has had summer stock experience.

Monroe has played character roles with the Equity Library Theater, and at Granyas Grove, Catholic University and with the Mount Vernon Players. Oliver is another veteran of Equity's library tours, as well as of companies of the American Theater Wing and the Manhattan Repertory Company. Smith appeared at Catholic U. in "Sing Out, Sweet Land" and "Song of Bernadette," both of which were taken to Broadway.

'Goodbye Again' Next At Braddock Heights

"Goodbye Again" will be the play for the Braddock Heights, Md., Mountain Theater this week. The comedy opens its run Wednesday night and plays through Saturday.

Richard Woods has the role of the romantic novelist, with Peggy Diem, John Weaver, Newton Arnold, Eunice Wheaton and John Munson in the supporting cast. The theater is at Braddock Heights Park on route U. S. 40, between Middletown and Frederick.

CANVAS COMICS: Kenneth Donner and Beth Walton, who'll have two of the leading roles in the original musical comedy, "How on Earth!" which will open the new Canvas Theater, Inc., a week from Tuesday in the town's newest entertainment spot across from the Georgia ave. Hot Shoppe. Milton Ritzenberg is manager of the new venture, Hal Gould, producer, and Tod Stanton director and author of the first offering

C. U. Continuing Ade Comedy

George Ade's new classic comedy, "The College Widow," tomorrow night will resume its run at Catholic University's campus theater, to continue through Thursday evening.

The Indiana humorist's comedy of 1910 was one of the great favorites of its day. His hero was typical of the stalwart, upright, turtle-necked sweater boys of a period when a man's biggest worry was whether his Stanley Steamer would blow up.

Father Gilbert V. Hartke has directed the revival, first of two Catholic U. offerings of the summer.

Young at Williamsburg

Williamsburg, Va., July 15.—Stark Young, the celebrated drama critic and novelist, will be guest lecturer this week at the William and Mary Institute Theater. He'll talk to members of the institue and the general public on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons in the Theater Workshop of the Wran Building.

More International Nights Upcoming at the Watergate

Top: L. to R., Jurriaan Andriessen, guest conductor this evening at the Watergate on Holland Night; Clarence Raybould, British guest conductor, Wednesday; Cesare Bardelli, baritone on Italian Opera Night, Friday; bottom, Leon Goossens, left, celebrated British oboe player, Wednesday; Herva Nelli, soprano, Friday on Opera Night

THREE more International Nights are featured on this week's Watergate concerts.

Tonight is Holland night; Wednesday is British in an almost all-British program, with visiting conductor and soloist; and Friday night the Italian Embassy is providing three opera stars and a conductor in some favorite opera excerpts.

Jurriaan Andriessen conducts his own Berkshire symphony tonight, and assists Miss Fania Chapiro in the Beethoven Emperor Concerto. Wednesday, Clarence Raybould, one of the BBC Symphony leaders, lists a wonderful program, with top oboist Leon Goossens in a new concerto by Gordon Jacob.

Friday night brings Herva Nelli to Washington for the first time in several years. Miss Nelli has sung Aida, Desdemona, and Mistress Ford in Toscanini's NBC operas. With her will be Antonio Madasi, heard here recently in Traviata and Boheme. Madasi, Toscanini's tenor in Falstaff, will be seconded by Cesare Bardelli, baritone. Giuseppe Antonicelli, for several seasons leader of the Metropolitan's Italian wing, will direct the concert.

THE National Negro Opera Company's performance of the Ordering of Moses will have some familiar singers in its leading roles. Joseph Lipscomb, Jacques Ringler, Bertha Bragg, Ruth Logan, and others will sing, with the chorus and a piano ensemble. The work will be staged in Griffith Stadium on July 28.

Station WCFM is broadcasting Vivian Harvey's fine program tonight from the National Gallery. The station is also launching an outstanding series of recorded broadcasts next Sunday. For six weeks, it will present the unusually handsome disks of the Haydn Society.

The music included in this series takes in Haydn's Creation, his symphonies 44, 82, 39, 91, and 102. There will also be quartets, trios, sonatas, and other works of Haydn, as well as Mozart's Great C Minor Mass, his entire opera, Idomeneo, and his motet, Exultate, Jubilate. The program will begin at 8 p. m. on Sundays and last from an hour and a half to three hours, depending on the music played.

These programs are being given through the generosity of Dr. William Ober, a trustee of the Haydn Society of Boston.

KOREAN NOTES: An excellent book of Korean Folk Songs (South Korean, that is) has just come to our attention. It was published in Dubuque, Iowa. It is the work of Mrs. Mary C. Kimm Joh. Beginning with the national anthem, it includes a dozen songs, in fine arrangements for either playing or singing.

The words are given in English, and in the Korean alphabet, simple to read, and sing. The Korean Press Office on I st. can supply copies at $1 each.

Victor Gives Opera Guide A New Look

By Paul Hume

VICTOR Book of the Opera. Revised edition by Louis Biancolli and Robert Bagar. Simon and Schuster. 596 pp. $3.95.

The Victor Books of Opera have been almost classics for nearly 40 years. Yet there is a new look and treatment to this eleventh edition.

It is written by two men qualified to talk about opera. Their style is refreshing, and the use of dialogue in giving the familiar stories is good.

Yet one can hardly read any such book about opera today without reflecting on the fading glory it represents. This new book describes many operas no longer heard today. But if one thinks of all the opera given in the United States today by the few companies maintained in this fundamentally unoperatic country, the repertoire is pitifully small.

Victor's new book even treads unfamiliar paths in telling about some operas from which it has recorded no music. This is almost philanthropic in a company that refuses to mention complete recordings of Turandot, Norma, Pelleas et Melisande, and half a dozen other great works.

Some day a publisher will bring out a book about operas, symphonies, or other kinds of music, and list all available recordings. I will then drop dead of shock.

The format of the new book is good, though we miss the old pictures, which had an aura about them that seemed to reflect something of the greatness of the singers they portrayed.

VICTOR Book of Overtures, Tone Poems, and Other Orchestral Works. Edited by Charles O'Connell. Simon & Schuster. 614 pp. $3.95.

Same sort of thing here as in the opera book. O'Connell can talk about composers and music in an interesting vein. He has made excellent use of quotations from composers, as in Holst's discussion of the Planets; and in Richard Strauss writing to Humperdinck about the latter's new opera, Hansel and Gretel.

But again, as always happens in these books, we are often left absolutely in the dark, frequently about a composer's most important works. Take Frederick Delius for an example. The majority of Delius' great output was recorded on Columbia records. This, being a Victor book, tells us nothing at all about Paris, Sea Drift, the Violin Concerto, or Appalachia, to mention four of the most interesting and important works by Delius.

In matters of opinion, O'Connell is customarily free with his adjectives. While he correctly points out that Delius is not "unique" in using a wordless chorus, he turns around and pronounces Debussy "Delius's unacknowledged master." Such generalization may make interesting sentences, but it does not make for accurate evaluation or analysis.

Nor would one, in examining this book, realize that Samuel Barber, one of our most important and most recorded composers, was recorded in anything but three short pieces, the orchestral essay, the adagio for strings, and an overture.

There is a tremendous recording of Barber's first symphony, done by Bruno Walter and the New York Philharmonic, and excellent records of his Capricorn Concerto, and cello sonata, to mention only three other more important compositions.

Now it is not the job or duty of Victor to publicize its competitor's wares. But it is certainly poor thinking on their part, and their publisher's, to put out such half-filled-in pictures. But S & S already know how I feel about this.

TAYLOR, Deems: Music to My Ears. Simon and Schuster. 281 pp. $3.00.

This begins to look like S & S day. Oh well.

If I view Deems Taylor with a jaundiced eye, you may credit it to being referred to, in some irreverent circles, as "the poor man's Deems Taylor." I resent such a title, both in the interest of truth, and because there is no need to assume that wealth entitles one to Taylor's easy road to inaccuracy, while poverty consigns one to Hume's wisdom.

For example: Taylor discusses the physical labor involved in a composer's writing down the notes of a composition, No one who knows anything about composition would minimize that immense operation.

But when Taylor says, "every note on every one of these 139 pages (he is speaking of Heldenleben by Strauss) had to be calculated, in its relation to the other notes, and in relation to the tone quality, range, and technique of the instrument that was to play it," he is blowing up into fantastic realms a matter which requires no such intricate detail.

Perhaps Deems Taylor has to do all that to write down his music, but Richard Strauss certainly did not have to. That may be just one of the reasons why Taylor is so far from Strauss.

Here is a book full of Taylorisms, gathered from radio remarks made by its author during seasons as commentator for the New York Philharmonic.

It is full of half truths, truths, and errors. It is entitled "Music to My Ears." How nice for its author. The New Yorker has a place for such writing: "Fascination with the sound of one's words."

The Record Player

Some Good Voices Record Pair of Puccini One-Acts

PUCCINI: Il Tabarro—complete one-act opera. Cetra-Soria 50029. $5.95.

Puccini: Gianni Schicchi—complete one-act opera. Cetra-Soria 50028. $5.95.

Cetra is filling a long-standing gap in records by bringing out the three one-act operas that comprise Puccini's Triptych. Only single arias from Gianni Schicchi and Suor Angelica have found their way onto records prior to this new set of records.

With each of the operas complete on a single 12-inch-long playing disk, you may buy any or all of the three without investing in more than you want.

Only Schicchi and Tabarro are out now. Suor Angelica is promised early this fall.

The casts are well balanced, but the singing in Schicchi reaches a much higher level throughout. That may be due partly to the fact that the music is so much better, and has more vitality and interest.

Gianni Schicchi is sung by Giuseppe Taddei, a marvelous singing actor whose voice colors any scene he enters. He has the part in full control, and makes the clever old man a sterling piece of character work. His moments as the voice of the dead "Buono" are perfect.

Giuseppe Savio is Rinuccio and able to handle the grueling tessitura with ease. His scene about the glories of Florence is exciting, and in duet with Lauretta he is a handsome Puccini tenor of the alluring line.

Grete Rapisardi sings Lauretta. We wish some soprano could approach the way Muzio used to sing "O Mio Babbino Caro." Neither Albanese nor Margaret Truman has been able to come near the delicacy with which her song came out.

The ensembles are cleverly written in Schicchi. And in this recording they come across with all the life and wit they own. It is a brilliant recording and a fine addition to opera shelves.

TABARRO is another matter. It's story is so tawdry and its music so full of banal cliches that it does not come off. The cast includes Antenore Reali as Michele, Glauco Scarlini as Luigi, Giuseppe Nessi as Tinca, Dario Caselli as Talpa. Clara Petrella sings Giorgetta, Ebe Ticozzi is Frugola, and Aldo Bertocci sings the Peddler.

The orchestra of the Italian radio plays both operas. Schicchi is directed by Alfredo Simonetti, and Tabarro by Giuseppe Baroni, who died shortly after making this recording. The Tabarro was taken at an actual performance in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Puccini's death, on November 29, 1949. It is of high quality even though made at a live performance.

Scarlini and Petrella have the right sound for their parts, but Reali makes Michele sound so repulsive it's no wonder Giorgetta stopped loving him. If you want this opera, don't expect much to happen in the first 20 minutes. After that, things warm up. But they never reach the Tosca-Boheme level they strive for.

A Welitch Recital, with Metropolitan Opera Orchestra under Fritz Reiner, and Paul Ulanowsky, pianist. Columbia 2118. $3.95.

With orchestra Miss Welitch sings two big arias from Don Giovanni: Or sai che l'onore: and Non mi dir, bell idol mio. With piano, she lists two songs by Dargomijsky: I Grieve, and the Miller: Moussorgsky: Star, Tell Me: Marx: Hat dich die Liebe beruhrt and Chopin Waltz; Strauss: Die Nacht, and Cacillie.

MISS WELITCH'S voice records with startling clarity and accuracy. Her best work and her bad moments come through with equal fidelity. Her general feeling for Mozart is good, but she commands neither real style nor vocal resources for these arias. The first falls short of its goal in rapid phrases; the second misses both in repose, and in the poor attempt at coloratura passages. Donna Anna was a noble woman, capable of profound emotion. Here she sounds merely superficially angry. Reiner and the orchestra are tops, and so is Ulanowsky's piano, given some of Columbia's best tone.

In the songs things are about as spotty. The first Russian song is touching in every way; the next two seem trivial, although they should not. But the language is natural to Welitch and there is much good sound in the songs.

In Lieder, Welitch has little true penetration into texts, singing everything much alike. Her inability to sing softly is also a serious handicap.—HUME.

ON RECORDS

PLAY A SIMPLE MELODY—Bing and Gary Crosby, Decca: In the past 20 years or so, Bing Crosby has made more than a thousand records. I have most of them in my collection, and play them frequently on the air. Whenever I come upon a particularly fine Crosby item, such as "I Surrender, Dear," "June in January" or "Love in Bloom," I generally introduce it to the Sundial and Moondial listeners as a "Crosby Classic." Like most classics, such a record generally dates back quite a few years. This week, however, I'm happy to tell you of a record by Bing which is brand new, but which nevertheless I feel must be dubbed a Crosby classic.

It seems that Decca Records, which started in business years ago with Bing Crosby as their principal asset, have decided that there might be a Crosby dynasty in the making, and so have protested their future by latching onto Bing's 16-year-old son, Gary.

THE four Crosby boys, I am told, are very modern youngsters who consider their father's style of singing rather old hat. It is probably in deference to the old man, therefore, that Gary chose for his recording debut a song that is definitely not of the current school but was, in fact, written 20 years before young Mr. Crosby was born.

In 1914, American dance music, which had progressed to the stage of development known as ragtime, suddenly deviated from its normal course to make way for an intricate importation from south of the border, the tango. At least one song writer who thought this exotic tempo to be a lot of complicated nonsense was Irving Berlin, aged 26 at the time; and he expressed his yearning for a return to the ragtime rhythm in a song, "Play a Simple Melody."

"PLAY A SIMPLE MELODY" is distinguished by an interesting musical device. Like most popular songs, it has the traditional verse, followed by the chorus. For purposes of harmonizing, however, it is possible to play the two simultaneously, using the verse as an obbligato to the chorus. And that's the way Bing and Gary sing the song.

I'm sure that Crosby lovers have seldom heard Bing sing with as much warmth and pride as he evinces in this duet with his son. Both "Play a Simple Melody" and the reverse side, "Sam's Song" contain a little affectionate heckling between Bing and Gary, plus an infectious spirit which makes this record a collector's item from the very start.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:00 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

New York Shows Taking Layoffs

Three Broadway attractions will take vacations starting Monday.

"Mister Roberts," well into its third year, will lay off until August 14, when it will resume at the Alvin Theater. Star Henry Fonda hasn't missed a performance since the opening.

"The Wisteria Trees," starring Helen Hayes, will take a similar rest, resuming the same date at the Martin Beck.

"Texas Li'l Darlin'" will be out five weeks, resuming at the Mark Hellinger on August 21.

Next Wednesday night the Arena, in the Hotel Edison, opens its third theater-in-the-round bill—a reprise of Giano-Carlo Menotti's twin opera program, "The Telephone" and "The Medium."

Art Has Recorded Our History

Water color, "The Water Color Class," done about 1815 to 1820 by an unknown artist, in the American Processional show at the Corcoran Gallery. The work was lent by Mrs. E. C. Chadbourne, of Washington

By Jane Watson Crane

THE French and the British, the Dutch, Irish, Canadians and Mexicans have all lent material to the Corcoran's historical exhibit, "The American Processional." From the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris are a number of records of the New World by artists known and unknown, dating from the early part of the eighteenth century. The National Museum of French-American Cooperation at Blerancourt has contributed a series illustrating engagements between the British and the French, and French private lenders have also sent material dating from the time of the Revolution.

Although the British Museum would not part with the John White sketches of the New World as Captain John Smith found it, there is a pre-Revolutionary painting, "George Whitefield Preaching" by John Wollaston, lent by the National Portrait Gallery of London, and a painting by John Smibert of George Berkeley dated about 1729 which has come from the National Gallery of Ireland in Dublin. The Hudson's Bay Company of London has lent a view of "The Company's Fleet Leaving Gravesend for Hudson Bay in 1767," painted by the contemporary artist, John Hood, and there is a scene by Edward Savage of the "British Fleet Sailing to America in 1776," lent by the National Museum of Wales at Cardiff.

Among the earliest works in the show is a view of New Amsterdam about 1650 sent from The Hague, Holland. Windsor Castle, the Victoria and Albert Museum, the National Museum of Archeology in Toronto, the National Gallery at Ottawa, Canada, (West's "Death of General Wolfe"), and the National Historic Museum in Mexico City are among the contributors. Records of the martial side of American history have been lent by the Naval Academy and from West Point.

Historical Record

THE exhibit brings out the fact that there have been artist-recorders of life and events in American history since the days of exploration and the founding of the Republic. Their function has continued to the present time, although the recording is less essential since the widespread use of the camera.

"The American Processional" is not confined to historical events. Some of the most enjoyable items in the exhibit relate to the customs and manners of the period.

These include views of the traditional American school house, the country fair, a "Flax-Scutching Bee," and a picnic on the Hudson. A correct Boston dinner party is portrayed by Henry Sargent in a painting dated about 1825, a slave market in Richmond, Va., about 1853, and the west of the emigrant trails, the forty-niners, and the first railroads to span the continent. There are a few hints of the social comment which was to follow a quarter century or so after the turn of the century ("Steel Workers" about 1890, "The Bowery at Night" about 1895, "The Breadline" 1900).

The Old Style

GENERALLY speaking, the contemporary records of the artists are not given to dramatization. Such paintings as "The Ride for Liberty," an action view of fugitive slaves fleeing on horseback, by Eastman Johnson, are the exception. In most instances the events are more exciting than their presentation. On the other hand, the American scene is done full justice by artists of the stature of Eakins and Homer.

One of the earliest of the genre pieces is one of the most delightful. "The Water-Color Class" (1815-1820) by an unknown artist is not only a charming composition, but it sums up more eloquently than words the attitude which prevailed toward this medium until Winslow Homer lifted it from the category of a genteel pastime some 25 years later. Ladies indulged in water color painting in much the same manner as they took up embroidery. The good ladies portrayed in "The Water Color Class" would doubtless lift their hands in horror if they could see what John Marin has done with the medium in our time.

Rash Is at Home With Dogs and Legislators

job for Bryson, who has had enough radio experience to do a radio show in his sleep and enough TV experience to regard radio as a breeze.

Once Buster Brown

HE made his radio debut as "Buster Brown," emcee of a kiddie show in St. Louis, at the age of 11, and stayed with it until his voice changed and plunged him into unemployment. After attending Washington University there, he took his changed voice back to radio and went through the routine experience of radio announcers in the days before it was "big business." He had news scripts set on fire by playful colleagues while he read them, and has had to light matches to read scripts by when some playful character doused the lights. He announced—with what success he hopes he never knows—his first wrestling match, the night he saw his first wrestling match. Comfortably ensconced behind the station's sports announcer in a free seat, Bryson was drafted into service by the sports man, who was suddenly taken ill. "Put the show on for me, will you? I'll be right back," he said. Bryson put it on and kept it on, since the man never came back, with the help of the engineer who kept hissing, "that's a Nelson, that's a flying mare."

He likes to catch wrestling on TV now, but not for the orthodox reasons. As the veteran of years of lip reading through the plate glass that separates the radio producer from the performer, Bryson can lip read. What the wrestlers say to each other is quite readable, if not printable.

Another by-product of radio experience is an ability to tell time without a watch, Bryson claims. (Well, how did you get caught with your south end in the camera, Bryson?)

Mostly TV Now

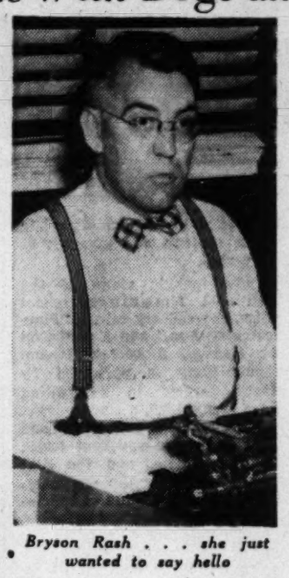
BRYSON is currently engaged most of the time with television. Besides his 7 p. m. news show on WMAL-TV, and numerous special events shows, he does a weekly stint in the animal league. As one of the two two-legged stars on "The Tailwaggers," (Mondays at 7:30 p. m., WMAL-TV) Bryson is quite adept at calming the savage beast. He has been hurt just once, scratched to a bloody pulp, by a cat who lunged at a dog in Bryson's arms and got Bryson by error. Other difficulties are primarily sartorial (dogs shed, you know).

As adept as he is at talking to Simiam apes and Sicilian donkeys, Bryson is even better at talking to Congressmen. In the winter time he has a weekly interview program with Washington bigwigs, using as a set a simulated corner of the Occidental Restaurant, which is papered with autographed pictures. To add to the pictures on the wall, Bryson has each guest autograph his photo at the show's close. Guests who forget to bring their pictures, make believe on an old photo of Bryson which now bears a good dozen of Washington's most distinguished signatures, up lapel and down chin, across nose and under eye.

The guests also have to pretend to be quaffing nice hot after dinner coffee, a terrible snare and delusion as it is actually Coke, pre-flattened and de-bubbled by design, and usually luke warm.

He Was Spotted

AS it has to all its perfermers, TV has brought recognition to Bryson. One day, walking across the street near his home, he was startled by some squealing brakes as a woman came to a halt in front of him. "You're Bryson Rash, aren't you?" she said. "I just thought I'd say hello."



Bryson Rash . . . she just wanted to say hello

Last Monday, stopping by the Statler Hotel after he'd gotten off a delayed plane, to grab a paper before he tore over to the Commonwealth Building for his 7 p. m. news show, he was accosted by a bell boy, "What do you want a newspaper for—you're supposed to know what the news is," he said firmly. "I want to see the funnies," said our hero and ran for the station.

His station colleagues never think of him as dignified, consider him the most jovial man around. "As a matter of fact, he's so jovial we've been moved into an office of our own," his Girl Friday, Mary Beth Larrabee, says, with an appreciative laugh. "He's always reading funny news dispatches and chatting on the phone in a good, clear voice.

Mary Beth remembers that Bryson wrote a story about her when she started at WMAL as a page during the war, because he was then radio columnist for the Evening Star. He was also handling press information for WMAL at the time. And an exquisite job he did of balancing the situation, in which he was rival columnist and good news source for one and the same person. That I remember.

He Doesn't Rattle

NOTHING rattles him. When his guest didn't show up one night for the "Capitol Closeup" show, he got in touch with an author friend who was attending a convention here. At two minutes to air time he gave him the SOS. He ad libbed the first ten minutes of the show, doing a kind of recap of the news until the friend, Bob Sherrod of Life, came puffing in for a four-minute interview.

Nothing makes him tear his hair except a delay in the 3:25 plane from New York. The newsreels used on the 7 p. m. show are processed in New York—even the ones which are shot in Washington—and flown to the Capital. With luck they leave New York airport at 3:25, arrive here in due course and don't get to the transmitter where they are put on the air until after 6 p. m. When the plane is late, it's a tight hassle. Bryson never sees the films until they are on the air.

On his brief two weeks substituting for Kiernan, Bryson's abilities aren't apt to affect the listener rating either way. But the sponsor probably isn't worried. "The Tailwaggers" has the largest audience of any live, locally produced television show, and his nightly news show pulls more than twice as many viewers as a comparable network news show on another station a little while later. And he does it in the face of such formidable competition as "Captain Video" and "Kukla, Fran and Ollie." Of course, it's a tough decision for some people to make. Bryson's two little girls have a hard time deciding between Ollie, the Dragon, and Daddy. Daddy does not always win.

FM-Sets Up 50% Here

Increasing public interest in frequency modulation radio in the Capital is revealed in the latest FM Set Survey recently announced by Jim Seiler, director of American Research Bureau.

In the most recent study, made in May, 1950, the survey disclosed that the number of sets capable of receiving FM broadcasts had increased to 78,000 in the Washington metropolitan area. Now, one out of every five homes is currently equipped for FM reception.

This represents a 50 percent increase in the number of FM sets in a seven-month period. In October, 1949, the ARB then reported a total of 51,282 FM families. Thus, during the past seven-month period, FM set ownership has increased from 13.2 percent to 20 percent of all homes in the metropolitan area.

It is believed that TV has helped FM set growth because a sizeable percentage of the sets equipped for FM reception are of the combination radio-TV types.

The October, 1949, and the May, 1950, ARB surveys were made by identical methods. Each was based upon a diary sampling system of approximately 1000 homes. Where an FM set was reported, ARB personnel inspected the set to see that it did have an FM band and that the set was in usable condition.

Back Increases Shows

Gunnar Back, WMAL newsman, will do a special series of broadcasts Monday through Friday for 15 minutes at 10:45 a. m.

Back regularly reports to the radio audience at 7 a. m., and will add this new broadcast to his schedule in order to cover the present taut world situation.

Well known for his news commentaries, Back has done several outstanding documentary series, including a venereal disease series several years ago on WTOP and a series on "Alcoholism in Washington" for WMAL last winter.

Makers See TV Tubes Still Getting Bigger

CONTINUED increase in the size of the picture in the home television set has become more evident as additional new models are offered. The increase is coming about through the use of larger-sized direct viewing tubes rather than by projection. As a matter of fact projection sets are far from prominent in the new lines.

The minimum size generally adopted is 12½ inches, with the possible maximum now raised to 30 inches. One Manufacturer (RCA) offered three basic inches, with the possible three basic types, 12½, 18 and 19 inches, the latter being an addition. Another (Dumont) settled on 17 inches as his minimum, with 19 inches as another size and promised that by fall he would have a 30-inch-tube set ready.

Another change noted is the tendency to switch from round to rectangular tubes which enable the use of large sizes without changing cabinet dimensions.

New 10-inch models this year have been scare, only one or two makers going down that small. The 7-inch seems to have disappeared altogether except in a few portables.

Haley Tries Trial Marriage With TV

Another big name joined television last week when Jack Haley made his entrance over the NBC video network as the emcee of a one-hour musical revue replacing the Kay Kyser show for the summer.

Haley will be on for 13 weeks. The comedian was as surprised as anyone when he suddenly found himself signing on the dotted line because he came to New York a few weeks ago to prepare to produce a play, not to dicker for TV. The play, "Mrs. Candy and Saturday Night," by Joseph Fields, will have to take a back seat until Haley completes his television chore.

McConnell to Go on TV

When Smiling Ed McConnell comes back on the air for another season next month he will add television for the first time. His radio resumes August 12 at the old morning time. The TV, starting August 26, will be a separate evening program. Both are NBC.

Jackie Jordan, NBC television actress, appears on many of the network's dramatic video shows. She has been seen most recently on the "Lights Out" and "Martin Kane, Private Eye"

Stokowski Disk Jockey Program

Leopold Stokowski, noted symphony conductor, is to serve as commentator in a classical "disk jockey" type series to run four weeks only on WNBC, New York key station of NBC. The music will be Stokowski's recordings of Johann Sebastian Bach's works in remembrance of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death.

There Goes That Neckline Again!

By The Associated Press

AFTER a temporary hiatus, the plunging neckline is easing back into television. For a period, sparked by considerable comment, feminine attire before the cameras was creeping much closer to the neck and even toward the chin.

Lately it is noticeable by the simple process of video viewing that the pendulum is swinging back. The plunging neckline seems to have returned to its former status and in some instances may even have surpassed it.

Kintners Now Have 5 Radios, 2 TV Sets

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

SIX years ago, Mrs. Robert Kintner answered a telephone in her East Eighties apartment and heard the polite voice of a researcher for Hooper Ratings ask if she were listening to the radio: "No," was her answer, "we hardly ever listen to the radio in this home."

KINTNER

Today, there are five radios and two television sets in the home of Bob Kintner, 40-year-old president of the 7-year-old ABC network. In 1943, the year NBC and ABC were separated, Kintner was in the Army, wondering and worrying about writing a Washington column when he returned to civilian life:

"In those days, I resented radio, with the usual newspaperman's wariness toward the whole medium—but I always wanted to become a businessman. That, I think, began when I was a financial reporter for the New York Herald Tribune."

Roosevelt Sent for Him

BOB and another Herald Tribune man, Joe Alsop, wrote a Washington column together—and together, they wrote the first closeup for Life magazine on a cousin of Joe's named Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Six months before Pearl Harbor, for some unexplained reason, Bob chucked his column and went into the Army. President Roosevelt heard about it and sent for him:

"There are a lot of columnists, Bob, I would rather see in uniform instead of you," said the President. "Why don't you stick around?"

But Bob had already burned his bridges—he wished he hadn't when Roosevelt then took out a speech he had been working on, and read Bob salient parts of it.

"It was the lend-lease speech, 24 hours before he delivered it—and there I sat, without a column to so much as drop a hint in."

Along Came Radio

IN THE Army, he got to be a lieutenant colonel in the Public Relations; out of the Army after a smashup in a plane, he was about to go back to his column. Ed Noble, who made his money in Life Savers before he bought ABC, tossed a new career to the civilian Kintner: "I used to know him when I was a reporter—he asked me if I ever thought of radio."

Bob started in public relations at ABC—"but I felt funny on the other side of the fence, so I switched to news." ABC has frequently been called "Winchell's network"—now Walter has to share his possession with Drew Pearson and twenty other commentators.

"I worked in radio news while the war was still on just before V-E Day, and that's where I first felt the dynamite you sit on in this business. There is a basic difference between radio news and printed news. I heard an announcer read a perfectly correct news bulletin—it looked absolutely innocent in print. But there was a phrase in it about 'peace rumors,' and that phrase started all our phones ringing and all sorts of premature celebrations. That's how I learned that a listener's ear is selective."

Unlike many people in all phases of show business, prophet Kintner refuses to write an obituary for radio.

"I am convinced that radio is here to stay—for talent and for sponsors. I think it will make a comeback in the fall. And for the crepe-hangers, here's one to chew on.

"Remember when everybody said Life magazine would kill The Saturday Evening Post?"

The Stamp Hobby Has No Price

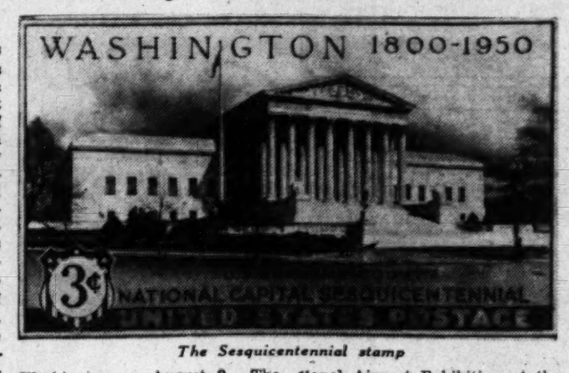
By William M. Stuart

STUART

STAMP dealers are at all times fairly besieged by collectors to purchase their wares. As a rule, these collections consist mainly of foreign stamps, many of which number several thousands — the large accumulations causing owners to believe them to be of unusual value. When the dealer inspects a certain collection, numbering perhaps up to 10,000 stamps, it is simply a waste of time, unless it contains outstanding issues. Stamps offered for sale should bring a ready market, but frequently an album offered for sale contains only common varieties.

The beginner sometimes tires of collecting and seeks a dealer to purchase his stamps of several thousand varieties. Although the stamps are practically of the cheaper variety, he can see no reason why a large price should not be paid for those to be bought at package rates. As has so often been said stamp collecting is simply a hobby and the pleasure derived from stamps cannot be bought or sold. Valuable stamps have a ready market, and huge numbers of foreign stamps are not bought by any dealer.

THE 3-cent judicial sesquicentennial commemorative stamp will be released first day in Washington on August 2. The central design of the new stamp is a reproduction of the United States Supreme Court Building. Across the top of the stamp in a single line of dark Roman is "Washington 1800-1950." The bottom border shows a dark panel in which is the inscription "United States Postage" and superimposed on this panel, at the left, is a shield of the United States on which is a circle bearing the denomination "3c." Below the central design is the wording, "U. S. Supreme Court" and "National Capital Sesquicentennial."



The Sesquicentennial stamp

The stamp was designed by Charles R. Chickering. The vignette was engraved by George A. Gundersen and the frame, lettering and numerals were engraved by John S. Edmondson.

The color will be purple. August 2 was selected for the first day of issue because it was on that day in 1776 the colonies completed the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

J. H. Weimer will hold his nineteenth mail precancel stamp auction on July 25. The total lots are 2167.

TO commemorate the 400th anniversary of the founding of Helsinki, the capital of Finland, three stamps have been issued. The 5-markka, light green shows a map of the city; the 9-mk., brown, pictures two of the founders of the city and the 15-mk., blue, pictures a government building.

The Silver Spring Philatelic Society has elected the following officers; President, James O. Peavey;; vice president, John L. Kessinger; secretary, Angus Alexander; treasurer, Harry P. Dodge; trustee for two years, Col. F. B. Pitts; trustee for three years, Mrs. Elizabeth Medbery. The committee will be announced at a later date. The club met in the board room of the County Building Thursday evening and will meet again on July 27.

The American Air Mail Society and the National Philatelic Museum will hold the 1950 International Airpost Exhibition at the Museum in Philadelphia from September 16 through October 18. The 27th annual convention of the Air Mail Society will be held September 22 through September 24. Mrs Grace P. Conrath, Box 519, Albion, Pa., is secretary of the Exhibition committee. Harry L. Lindquist will be head of the judges. A branch postal station will be operated at the National Philatelic Museum for the days of the Air Mail Society convention. An auction will be conducted by F. W. Kessler of New York. Gearhart Frantz, 2513 Marshall rd., Drexel Hill, Pa., is chairman of the Bourse committee. Headquarters of the convention will be at Hotel Ritz-Carlton. George D. Kingdom, box 37, Conneaut, Ohio, is general chairman of the convention.

The Woodridge Stamp Club will meet tomorrow evening at 9 at the Woodridge Public Library, 2200 Rhode Island ave. ne. During the summer months other meetings of the Club will be held on August 21 and September 18, at the Woodridge Public Library.

AT THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, Ignatz Reiner of New York, vice president of the Society of Philatelic Americans, spoke on the famous "Black Jack" stamps. He exhibited many pages of rare covers and stamps and went into detail regarding errors, colors and other points found only in a specialized collection. The stamp honoring President Andrew Jackson was issued during 1861-1866, the exact date for the first stamp being July 6, 1863. In connection with the collection the speaker exhibited many historical documents and covers. Next meeting Tuesday evening at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st., nw.

Davis, a superior femmedian, was heading the Hooper only three years ago. Today she is a summer replacement . . . The midnight jive cacophony on some stations sounds like a jukebox calling its mate. You can get better music dropping a set of dishes . . . The Hit Parade is better on radio than on teevy . . . Another addition to girlevision is a blonde charmer named Marion Carter. Reminds you of Jean Harlow . . . Have you heard the recording called "Pudgy the Whistling Piggy"? Don't.

THE Hollywood Express: Mary Brian, the Liz Taylor of her hey-day, is back on the Straw-hat Circuit in "Goodbye, My Fancy" at Santa Fe . . . "Death of a Dream" will get the Hollywood "premiere" touch when it unveils at the Embassy here. Quentin Reynolds auth'd . . . Movietown is already planning films titled "Formosa" and "Indo-China" . . . Clark Gable is the latest to succumb to the saddle-faddle sort of flicker. His next will be a gallop-and-gunfire epic . . . In "Three Little Words," Gloria DeHaven plays her mother, Mrs. Carter DeHaven, once a top-notcher on the big time . . . Mrs. Kirk Douglas got her abrogation from the star in February. The only thing, she reports, holding up any marriage he plans is that the decree won't be final for a year . . . The Palace Theater's front-page timing. It booked "The Story of G.I. Joe" . . . The advance reports on Universal's next offering, "Louisa," indicate a click . . . Figger this out: "Sister Carrie" was one of T. Dreiser's most popular novels. So the film version will be named "Carrie Ames" . . . The Lawrence Oliviers (Vivien Leigh) will take $500,000 out of Hollywood in two films. Wage slaves.

"DEAR W.W.," scolds J. Holland of the N. Y. Journal-American amusement section. "On June 2 your article on how the Little Church Around the Corner got that name calls for a very definite correction from me. George Holland, whose funeral gave the church its affectionate name, was my grandfather. He was not a destitute comedian. The statement that he jumped off the pier because he couldn't sell tickets to his own benefit is completely without foundation. The further statement that Dr. Sabine advised the mourners to go to the church around the corner (because his was decorated for a wedding) is equally inaccurate. When he died, Joseph Jefferson (his closest friend) and my father went to Dr. Sabine and made it clear the deceased was 'an actor' . . . Sabine declined to conduct the services and referred Jefferson and my father to the Little Church Around the Corner 'where perhaps you can find help.'

"Jefferson, greatly incensed at the affront to his dead friend, exclaimed: 'God bless the Little Church Around the Corner.'

"It seems to me, frankly, that an incident which has lived so long and which is so thoroughly documented should be reported correctly. I would be interested to know the source of your misinformation."

WASHINGTON University, St. Louis: "Dear Sir: I was very much interested in your column (Church Around the Corner) for the rather enlightening but erroneous statements which you made. The Rev. Sabine refused to bury Mr. Holland because he was an actor. The source for this is Noah M. Ludlow's 'Dramatic Life as I Found It', pp. 699-700, and Joseph Jefferson (autobiography) pp. 338-340. Mr. Winchell, such inaccuracy, tsk, tsk. B. M. Hess, Department of English."

OUR source was "A History of the New York Stage from the First Performance in 1732 to 1901," by Col. T. Allston Brown. In three volumes. Published in 1903 by Dodd, Mead & Co. N. Y. . . . To wit: "George Holland . . . was a great 'worker' for his benefits and one of the most extraordinary methods he ever adopted to dispose of tickets was the following: On the day before one of his benefits. . . . he fell into the water near the Fulton Fish Market piers. . . . Rescuers and others found the unsold benefit tickets in his clothes and bought them all" . . . On page 279, line 40, the author notes: "There has always been a great deal of misconception on the subject of the George Holland funeral at the Little Church Around the Corner and a great deal of injustice done to the Rev. Dr. Sabine, who did not refuse his church for the funeral. . . . A wedding was to take place there the same day . . . Dr. Sabine conducted the committee to his church . . . showing them the emblems of joy already adorning the walls . . . and asked whether a funeral would be appropriate. The committee agreed that a funeral at such a time would be very much out of place, but added that the ceremony would not be deferred. 'Then' said Dr. Sabine, 'you might go to the little church around the corner' . . . The story was amplified and exaggerated and thence came the furor which was created about George Holland's funeral."

Book Accents French Art In Drawings

SIX CENTURIES OF FRENCH MASTER DRAWINGS IN AMERICA, by Regina Shoolman and Charles E. Slatkin. (Oxford, $7.50.)

THIS BOOK contains 145 drawings, with detailed accompanying text, a preface and introduction by the authors, and a foreword by Charles Sterling of the Louvre. Preparation of the work was supported by a Littauer Foundation grant and then carried on with the advice of numerous experts, and choices were limited principally by the size of the pages (8½ by 11 inches).

The result is definitely one of the finer art books. The quality of the reproductions is first rate; the range is from the fifteenth century to the present, and this is represented, correctly as far as I know, as being the first volume of its kind.

"French drawing inevitably reflects the national predilection for elegance, refinement, lucidity and grace," the authors say. Since there are reported to be in this country more French drawings than drawings by all other schools combined, the authors had a sufficient representation from which to select, and the reader will find the Gallic flavor on every page.

The book should encourage what badly needs encouragement; A wider interest in drawings.

20,000 Have Seen 'Unto These Hills'

Cherokee, N. C., July 15.—Over 20,000 persons have seen "Unto These Hills," the new Cherokee Indian drama, in the 13 performances held here since June 30, which saw the opening of this new Mountainside Theater.

Francis Cardinal Spellman led a delegation of his faith at Wednesday night's performance of the symphonic drama by Kermit Hunter. Gov. Gordon Browning will lead an all-Tennessee Day at the theater on the 23d, prior to opening Southern Handicrafters' Fair at Gatlinburg the next evening.

Rangerettes Got to Have Dates

Here is how the "line" of the Kilgore College Rangerettes looks when the girls prepare to put on a drill on the gridiron

By Harold V. Ratliff

KILGORE, TEX. (AP).—When Miss Gussie Nell Davis, instigator and guiding light of the Kilgore College Rangerettes, hangs out the sign "Tryouts Today," she has to step back quick.

Each September there is a stampede for the 25 to 30 places open in the nationally famous precision drill and dance unit. From 150 to 170 girls seek these places.

Every gal with two arms and two legs wants to get into the act, which already has led to performances in the Rose Bowl, Cotton Bowl, Shamrock Bowl, Sugar Bowl—and, coming up, the game between the college all-stars and the champions of professional football at Soldiers Field in Chicago. It marks the tenth year of the unit.

They All Want In

TO BE a Rangerette is the epitome of the college life among the east Texas beauties.

Miss Davis surveys all available talent in two days, selecting the lucky few.

"The type of girl we like is one with a lot of ginger, one we have to 'keep after'—still a refined girl, not a tough. A pretty face also helps, Miss Davis says.

The Rangerettes always put their best foot forward, installing the classified chassis and the prettiest faces as the officers.

Beauty without ability is not enough, however.

The intricate nine-minute dance routines can't be done with two left feet. The chorus line hands out jobs strictly on ability.

Must Have Dates

"WE DON'T want a girl who doesn't have dates," says Miss Davis. "For that very reason keeping Rangerettes is our hardest task. Many get married. We had 10 marry at mid-term A married girl can stay in the Rangerettes provided she stays in school.

"The boys give us our biggest headaches at practice sessions. We practice 50 minutes a day, and are always late starting because some few hold hands at the door until the last possible moment."

The Rangerettes are not a sideline at Kilgore College.

Miss Davis' sole duty is "her girls." Kilgore College has hired Denard Haden, one of the outstanding dancing choreographers in the Southwest, to help with the routines.

Miss Davis conducts reducing classes; classes in how to gain, not only in weight but in personality; instructions in walking, sitting, clothes, makeup, hair and how to pose for photographers.

"We want a girl to look her most glamorous," Miss Davis says. "We do everything to make them interesting looking."

At Least a C

TO STAY a member of the Rangerettes, the girls must maintain a C average. There are an even dozen Phi Beta Kappas among all those pretty faces.

In the 10-year history of the dancing unit there have been only two elopments.

"Both of those came during the war," says Miss Davis, "when there was a shortage of time along with all the other shortages."

Miss Davis came to Kilgore College in 1940 from Greenville High School. College President B. E. Masters gave her a free hand and the Rangerettes were the result.

Though the football players grumble about the stands emptying after the half-time show, and virtually all other college activities take a back seat to the group, all of Kilgore busts its buttons when the girls step high, wide and handsome into the big time.

Retirement Age 60 For Jersey Teachers

Trenton, N. J., (AP).—The retirement age for New Jersey teachers who have taught 35 years has been reduced from 62 to 60 years in a bill signed by Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll recently.

The bill amends the teachers' pension and annuity fund act to eliminate pension reductions formerly made when teachers retired after 35 years of service but before reaching the age of 62.

Progress of Mexico Spurs Pan American Highway Plan

PICTURE a Pan American highway—one continuous ribbon of hard-surfaced road to stretch more than 15,000 miles from Alaska to the Straits of Magellan.

Mexico has given this concept a big boost this spring. The neighbor republic's current road-building progress was dramatized effectively by a government-sponsored automobile race from border to border, showing fast time to be possible over the 2170 miles of Mexico's newly completed Pan American Christopher Columbus hwy.

Overall, the Western Hemisphere route is known as the Pan American Highway System. Its middle American reach is often called the Inter-American hwy., notes the National Geographic Society. Perhaps a dozen sectional names could be compiled, like Christopher Columbus hwy. in Mexico, Simon Bolivar hwy. in Venezuela, Franklin D. Roosevelt hwy. for the Guatemalan section and again for the coastal route in Peru and northern Chile.

Gaps in Central America

RUNNING south from the United States border at El Paso, Tex., Mexico's Christopher Columbus route passes through Chihuahua, Durango and Zacatecas. At Mexico City it meets the older and shorter Pan American route running south from Laredo. The joint highway continues southeast 857 scenic and mountainous miles through Puebla and Oaxaca to a present dead end at Ocatal on the Guatemalan border.

For the next 30 miles into Guatemala, no auto road exists. For another 70 miles or so, the road is poor and likely to be impassable in the May-to-October rainy season. For the rest of its 330-mile Guatemala length, however, and for its 530 miles through El Salvador, southern Honduras and Nicaragua, it is nearly all paved or hard gravel surface.

In Costa Rica, the highway is paved or gravel-surfaced for a few score miles each side of the capital, San Jose. It is dirt road for about 90 miles at the Nicaraguan end, and unsurveyed trail, impassable for automobiles, for 90 miles at the Panama end.

Panama Wilderness

PANAMA continues the Costa Rica gap in the motor road for 28 trail miles from the border to Hato de Volcan, then provides good road for 340 miles east to Panama City. East of the canal, however, lies the unsurveyed wilderness of Darien, one of the world's least known areas. A road link here is perhaps years in the future, and tourists to South America must ship their cars to Colombian or Venezuelan ports.

In South America alone, some 13,000 miles of main road and branches are identified with the Pan American highway system. Starting from the Caribbean port of La Guaira, the route is generally good through Venezuela and Colombia. After a gap in southern Ecuador, bypassable by ferry, it is good through Peru and northern Chile, crossing the Andes into Argentina by 12,800-foot Uspallata Pass, site of the famous Christ of the Andes.

An east fork near Arequipa, Peru, runs through Bolivia and central Argentina to meet the west route at Buenos Aires. Spurs of the system reach north to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil and to Asuncion, Paraguay. Good roads stretch over most of Argentina.

Two North Carolina Beaches Are Merged

Southport, N. C.—Merger of Caswell and Long Beaches gives North Carolina a rapidly developing beach 13 miles long between the Inland Watrway and the Atlantic Ocean from Fort Caswell at the mouth of the Cape Fear to Lockwood Folly Inlet. The combined area will be known as Long Beach. It includes 15,000 acres with 500 acres set aside for zoning for year 'round use.

Plans for streets, utilities, hotels and motor courts are being made. Thirty new cottages are already under construction. Long Beach runs East-West, which is unusual on the Atlantic Coast. It is featured by grass-anchored sand dunes, rising as high as 99 feet.

When you're away on vacation... your best friends won't tell you but The Washington Post will Suppose you could get a friend to write you every day while you're away on vacation to keep you posted on what's happening in Washington. The poor fellow would probably be kept busy writing page after page all day long—and even then he would have to go to The Post to get most of his news.

Where else but The Post could he read Shirley Povich's daily sports column? Where else could he find Jerry Klutz' "Federal Diary"? Where else can he get Mary Haworth's column? Only in The Washington Post!

Then you'll want to know what Bill Gold is saying in "The District Line," what your favorite Post comic strip characters are up to, what The Post columnists are writing about—Walter Winchell, Drew Pearson, Joseph Alsop, Walter Lippmann, Joseph Livingston, Dick Coe. Obviously, your friends won't tell you, they can't tell you. But The Washington Post will!

So why impose on your friends? Get The Washington Post yourself, by mail. Send the coupon NOW or phone NA. 4200 and give us your vacation forwarding address.

Estes Park Nearly Hay Fever Free

ESTES PARK, Colo.—Estes Park is a good place for those who want a holiday from hay fever sniffles, according to a booklet released by the Chicago Motor Club travel bureau.

The booklet contains a ragweed pollen index for the United States and adjacent areas. The index states that: Above 10 is not recommended, between 5 and 10 is fairly good, below 5 is good and below 1 is excellent.

On the index Estes Park is rated at 1; Grand Lake, .18; Denver, 31; Colorado Springs, 27, and Chicago, 75.

The travel bureau estimates that summer vacation plans in one family out of every six or eight must be adjusted with reference to the pollen map and the pollen calendar.

We can't remember what this Trans World Airline stewardess was doing with that puppy dog, but trust you'll agree it makes a nice picture

We Go For a Ride On Rehoboth Pony

By Orval Hopkins

ONE of the things you do in Rehoboth is go for a horseback ride. We repaired thus, not being people to wander from the path, en famille to the local livery stable one day last week. This establishment is run by a man who continues to remind me of Bobby Clark, the comedian. His pace is nothing at all like Bobby's, nor is his delivery. (There's a pun there and the first person to detect it gets three new Cadillacs.) Must be the unlighted cigar he wears.

Anyhow, there we went and encountered some customers attempting to hire horses. The man led one out and a girl climbed aboard. The horse drowsily turned around, walked back into the barn and into his stall, and stood there for quite a while, the girl still on his back.

After what seemed a long time, I asked for two ponies for children. The man produced a pinto mare and a black stallion, each standing about 4½ feet high. I figured these mice couldn't give me any trouble, so I put Polly on the mare and Sam on the black. I led the mare down the road a piece, the stallion maybe 30 yards astern and led by my wife. Then I turned around and led her back.

"Turn him around and let's go the other way for a while," I called to Mary Jane. The black stopped in his tracks. He began to whinny and snort. He stamped his little foot. All the while Mary Jane is trying to turn him around. And all the while I am pulling nearer with the little mare, who by this time is also making strange noises. Polly and Sam are delighted.

"Get him out of there!" I bawled. Mary Jane gave him another push. I am unable to stop the little mare (a mouse, did I call her?).

"Who you yelling at?" my wife yells. The ponies are maintaining a collision course.

Suddenly a boy races from the stables, belts the stallion across the derriere and packs him away from there.

After the dust has settled, my wife is still a little chilly. "What's going on here, my oaf?" she inquires gently.

"Well, m'love," I reply. "The little mare was in what you might describe as 'condition eager.'"

"Condi—— Oh," she said. "You didn't know it?"

"Sure," I admitted. "'Bobby Clark' told me."

"Then why in the name of @$£1b& did we hire these goats?"

"I thought he was joking," I limped. "You know how Bobby Clark is."

REHOBOTH, vacationwise, is its fresh, affectionate self. We had several days of sun. This, subtracting, gave us several days in the house with the kids, an adventure in itself . . . We saw Alice Gundry, still presiding over the Corner Cupboard Inn, and had a drink with Kitty Higgins at her new establishment, the Boathouse, in Dewey Beach . . . The Hotel Henlopen, a Rehoboth landmark and gathering point for years, has been condemned and is being partially razed. The talk is that it will be rebuilt and open again next summer . . . We had our name (misspelled) in the Delaware Coast Press, formerly the Public Press, successor to the Lewes Breakwater Light and the Rehoboth Beacon. The Press is a sturdy pillar which uses homey items like the one about some people who had a party "on the spacious, grass-covered lawn of their nextdoor neighbor."

FLAIR, the magazine for I'm not sure whom, has a dead-cinch method of getting its name in the paper. You simply write to nitwits like me and say, "In view of the fact that your column seems a little off the beaten track, we thought etc., . . ." And then you you sign it Shirlee Gibbons. Well Shirlee, honey, the piece about Hall's restaurant at 7th and K sts. sw. is very nicely done and I'm sure Hall's appreciates it. I haven't been to Hall's in some years, but I'm fixing to pay it another visit.

A COCKTAIL RETREAT, which I assume is a sort of high-test name for a saloon, called the Sky Cabana has been opened atop the Hotel Senator in Atlantic City, James E. Reed wants you to know. It "affords patrons a panoramic view of the boardwalk and beach on one side and the city and bay area on the other," says Reed.

GOT $2950? That's the minmum it'll cost you to take the world cruise being planned for the Stella Polaris by the Bergen Steamship Co. She'll sail from New Orleans next January 6 and return, 134 days and 42 ports of call later, on May 21. . . . Colonial Airlines has made its $85 round-trip fare to Bermuda available to passengers flying from Philadelphia, Wilmington, Baltimore or Atlantic City, as well as New York and Washington.

SPECIAL TICKETS, costing the presumably special price of one buck, are available for the gardens of the colonial Governor's Palace in Williamsburg. They entitle the happy visitor to stroll through the 10-acre estate separately from the tours of the palace. . . . Says here American Overseas Airlines will "airlift" 160 German exhibitors to the first United States International Trade fair in Chicago next month. The flights will originate in Frankfurt. . . . Charles F. Pratt of the American Automobile Association advises anybody going out of the country this summer to be vaccinated against smallpox, unless the traveler has had a successful vaccination within three years of the time he plans to return to the United States. You can save yourself trouble, Pratt says, by taking abroad with you a properly executed International Certificate of Inoculation and Vaccination as proof of immunization. Get it from your personal physician and have it certified by a State or local health officer.

Bahamas Visitors Find Inexpensive Cameras Abound

NASSAU, JUNE 24.—Visitors here are finding that they can get most types of cameras and camera equipment cheaper here than in the United States.

Among the bargains are a camera which retails for $280 in the United States but sells here for $152. Another, $275 in the United States sells for $154 in Nassau.

Recently, scientists from Woods Hole, Mass., made an expedition to the Bahamas. They tested the sea off Nassau and gave it a clarity rating of 140—proving that an object lowered into the ocean was still visible at a depth of 140 feet, one of the highest clarity ratings for water in the world.

Undersea photography was born in Nassau. The first moving picture to be filmed under water was made off Nassau by Cameraman-Explorer J. E. Williamson, who also started the world's first undersea postoffice. Since then, Nassau has provided the background for many undersea pictures.

Amateurs who are dubious about light requirements for undersea photography should have no trouble in Nassau.

Sparks, Cunard Head In U. S., to Retire

Liverpool, (U.P.)—The Cunard Steamship Co. has announced that its chief representative in the United States, Sir T. Ashley Sparks, would retire November 1.

He will be succeeded by Brig. John H. Hardy. Harold Borer will continue as American general manager in New York.

'In God We Trust'

James Pollock, governor of Pennsylvania from 1855 to 1858, and later director of the Philadelphia Mint, was the man who suggested the phrase "In God We Trust" be placed on United States coinage.

Harpo Marx...

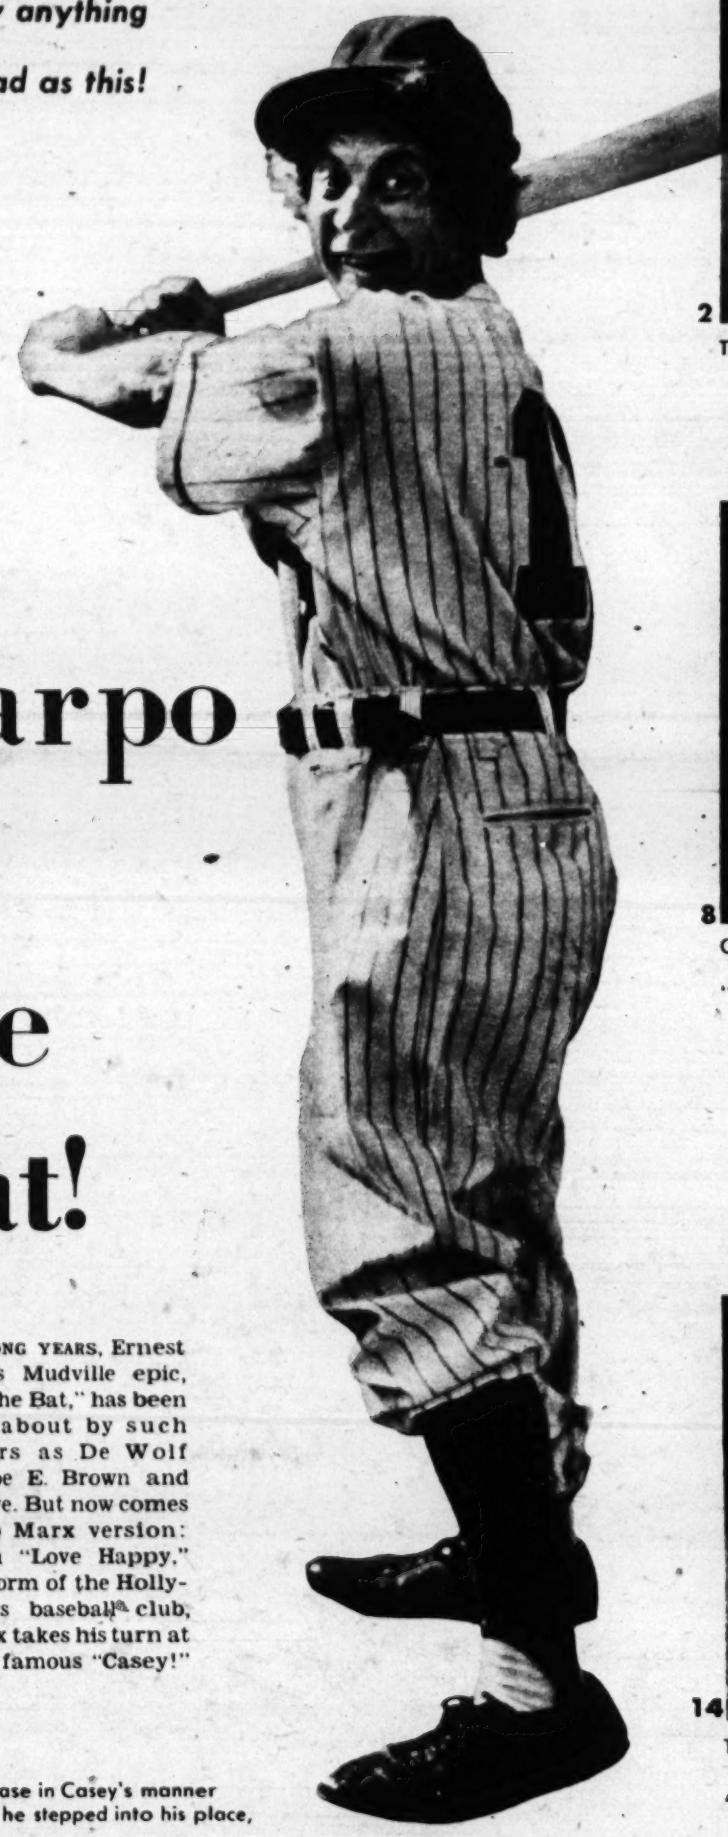
...he's Casey at the Bat

PAGE 2

REG U S PAT OFF

Mudville's fans never saw anything as mad as this!

Harpo at the Bat!



FOR 60 LONG YEARS, Ernest Thayer's Mudville epic, "Casey at the Bat," has been battered about by such performers as De Wolf Hopper, Joe E. Brown and Danny Kaye. But now comes the Harpo Marx version: fresh from "Love Happy," in the uniform of the Hollywood Stars baseball club, Harpo Marx takes his turn at bat as the famous "Casey!"

There was ease in Casey's manner as he stepped into his place,

There was pride in Casey's bearing and a smile on Casey's face,

And when responding to the cheers
he lightly doffed his hat,
No stranger in the crowd could doubt
'twas Casey at the bat!

Close by the sturdy batsman
the ball unheeded sped—
"That ain't my style," said Casey.
"Strike one!" the umpire said.

"Kill him! Kill the umpire!"
shouted someone from the stand.
And it's likely they'd have killed him had not Casey raised his hand.

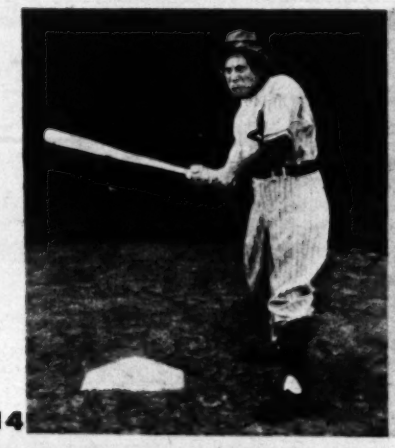
As the great moment approaches,



14

They saw his face grow stern and cold,
they saw his muscles strain
And they knew that Casey wouldn't let that ball go by again.

15

The sneer is gone from Casey's lips, his teeth are clenched in hate;

Copr. 1950, PARADE Publication, Inc., 485 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y. All Rights Reserved Under International and Pan American Copyright Conventions

Ten thousand eyes were on him as he rubbed his hands with dirt,

Five thousand tongues applauded as he wiped them on his shirt,

And while the writhing pitcher ground the ball into his hip—
Defiance gleamed in Casey's eye, a sneer curled Casey's lip.

And now the leather-covered sphere came hurtling through the air,
And Casey stood a-watching it in haughty grandeur there;

With a smile of Christian charity great Casey's visage shone,
He stilled the rising tumult and bade the game go on;

He signalled to the pitcher and again the spheroid flew;

But Casey still ignored it and the umpire said "Strike Two!"

"Fraud!" cried the maddened thousands and echo answered "Fraud!"
But one scornful look from Casey and the multitude was awed.

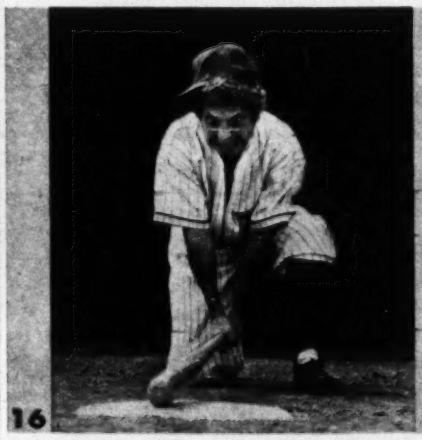
mighty Casey awaits final pitch:



He pounds with cruel violence
his bat upon the plate,

And now the pitcher holds the ball,
and now he lets it go,
And now the air is shattered
by the force of Casey's blow.

Oh, somewhere in this favored land
the sun is shining bright;
The band is playing somewhere,
and somewhere hearts are light,
And somewhere men are laughing,
and somewhere children shout;

CONRAD RICHTER'S Clarks Valley, Pennsylvania

The Place I Like Best

A great writer looks back to a beloved valley

Writer Conrad Richter has just published another of his novels of the westward-pushing American frontier ("The Town"—Knopf). But he has never lost his nostalgic love of the Pennsylvania valley of his boyhood.

By CONRAD RICHTER

PREACHERS' sons and writers get around. Being both, I have lived in some two dozen different American localities. But one of them holds a peculiar effect above the others. Go to the Susquehanna at Harrisburg. Turn from the river at Dauphin and you come to a valley between two mountains. This is our Clarks Valley.

We found it by merest chance many years ago. Never before had we seen such a natural and unspoiled piece of Americana, such a charming country road running along a clear stream. We bought the valley's oldest farm. And the sturdy natives took us in.

Today, much has changed. Our beloved Pine Tree Farm is in other hands. The road is paved, the stream reduced. And yet, when we come within a few miles of it from any direction, the warm hands and currents of Clarks Valley reach out to us, and we get an emotion we do nowhere else on earth.

The Old Road, the Old Spring

I feel that should I turn up the valley at Red Bridge, the same old, ineffably lazy dirt road will run beside the full creek. Hemlocks and pines will look black on the mountainside. Lady slippers or gentians will still be growing at their accustomed places. We'll find the water at Kettle Spring unexcelled as always. Perhaps I shall even be able to do that pleasantest thing, do nothing but sit under a walnut tree in the summer dusk talking for an hour or two to country men about country things.

Without Clarks Valley and what it richly gave me, several of my books could never have been written.

Thrifty Turkey Salad Bowl

a whole meal in itself

Here's the kind of salad that even menfolks love, for it's not just salad . . . but Turkey Salad! Hearty and substantial. Yet, it's no trick to fix and costs very little. Here's why:

It's made with Swanson Canned Boned Turkey. One 6-oz. can equals a full pound of dressed turkey. No bones. No waste. It's all juicy white and dark turkey meat.

Ingredients:

- ½ head of lettuce, chopped
- ¼ cup French dressing
- 1 6-oz. can Swanson Boned Turkey
- 2 tomatoes
- 1 hard cooked egg, quartered
- 1 carrot
- 6 stuffed olives

Toss lettuce and dressing. Arrange slices of Swanson Boned Turkey in the center. Garnish with tomato wedges, eggs, carrot curls, and sliced olives. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Nowadays, both chicken and turkey come in cans in almost any way you could wish. They've been carefully, skillfully packed by the Swanson people—all the goodness sealed in, all the waste parts and work removed.

Menu suggestion for a Ranch-style Brunch

Put everything on the table, pull up the chairs, let everyone help themselves . . . that's ranch-style.

Combine breakfast with lunch some Sunday . . . that's brunch. One of the easiest, pleasantest ways to entertain, too, by the way. And Sue Swanson suggests you serve:

Ranch-Breakfast Platter

Here's what you do: Pile fluffy scrambled eggs on a hot platter and surround with hot Swanson Canned Chicken a la King. It's already to heat and serve just as it comes from the can.

Chicken a la King made from Swanson's treasured recipe doesn't skimp on chicken. There's plenty of big juicy chunks blended in rich real cream sauce, flavored with tender mushrooms and pimiento. Mmmm—bet you collect a lot of compliments when you serve this tasty dish.

CHICKEN NOODLE NEST

(makes 3 servings)

- 1 16 oz. can of Swanson Chicken Fricassee
- 1 can of chow mein noodles

Heat Chicken Fricassee until it comes to a simmer. Then heap its golden goodness on crisp chow mein noodles.

That's all you have to do to enjoy marvelously tender chicken parts cooked to juicy perfection in rich real butter gravy. Swanson Chicken Fricassee is especially good, because it's pressure cooked right in the can so none of the flavorsome juices are lost. And when chicken's cooked that way it's a treat in anyone's language! Nice served with a green salad and pickled pears or peaches.

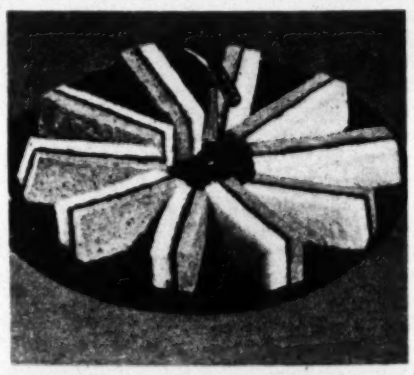
Only the plumpest, juiciest, tastiest chickens and turkeys get labeled with the Swanson name. Not only that, they're double-checked by U. S. Government inspectors and carry Good Housekeeping Magazine's guarantee seal.



One of the tricks is to use two kinds of bread, in these unusual, mouthwatering sandwiches.

Easy way to make dainty teatime sandwiches

Here's all you need:

- Sliced white bread
- Sliced whole wheat bread
- Swanson Chicken Spread

Cover slices of white bread with Swanson Chicken Spread—the sandwich filling that's all luscious chicken meat, delightfully seasoned, ready to spread.

For a novel two-tone effect—alternate slices of white and whole wheat bread. Trim crusts. Cut into 4 narrow strips for dainty, different finger sandwiches. An extra can or two of Swanson Chicken Spread is a very useful thing to have on hand.

CONVICTED of drunken driving, 21-year-old Charles Huff of Detroit hears himself sentenced to seven days in jail. "I don't think the judge was too tough," he told PARADE. "I deserved it."

I went to JAIL for

Detroit justice moved fast—and hard—when

WHEN 21-YEAR-OLD Charles Huff was telling this story to writers Robert Goldman and Sam Petok, he was sitting in a Detroit courtroom waiting to go to jail. Huff is no criminal. He is a fine, likeable young stock clerk with a sense of civic responsibility. But he made one mistake he'll always regret: he tried to drive a car after he'd been drinking. He had never done it before. He tells his story here in hope that other drivers will profit by his mistake!

I WAS SENTENCED to seven days in jail for drunken driving. I deserved it.

I told the judge I was guilty. I certainly wouldn't want to be on the street or have any of my friends near a driver who was in my condition last night.

I'm telling you this because I think people who drink should do their drinking at home – and not before driving. I might have killed somebody if I hadn't been arrested. As it is, I don't remember what happened after I left the last bar.

(Editor's Note: One man did remember, however. He is Patrolman Albert G. Hofbauer, assigned to a plainclothes detail known locally in Detroit as the "Clean-Up Squad." One of the squad's principal functions is to check conduct in bars.

"I was in this bar," says Hofbauer, "and saw Huff and another fellow drinking. Huff left the bar with his friend, got into the car and started driving backward from the curb. He backed across three lanes and then backed through a red light. He jumped a curb and the car stalled."

Now go on with Huff's story.)

I just remember waking up in a cell. And then I came to court.

I'm engaged and my girl – she's pretty sore at me – went bicycling last night. I didn't have anything to do. So a buddy of mine called and he and me got together at a neighborhood bar.

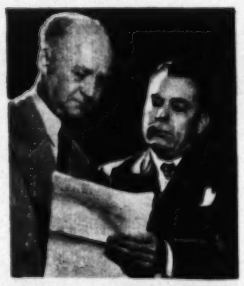
We started drinking and playing shuffleboard at about 7 p.m. We went to about three bars after that, I think. We were drinking and playing more shuffleboard.

Pretty soon we were playing for drinks. My buddy kept saying "Let's have a couple more." So we did.

"A Couple Drinks Later"

A LITTLE LATER, two guys came in and asked if we wanted to play them for drinks. We started winning, and you can't quit when you're ahead.

Huff was jailed in one city's crackdown. Meanwhile, the nation



DETROIT traffic judges John Watts and George Murphy send erring drivers to jail.

IN ALL STATES, traffic officials are getting tougher with drunken drivers and speeders. But if Charles Huff had been arrested for drunken driving in some other cities, chances are he would have drawn a stiff fine —but no jail sentence.

Detroit, however, and a few others, have cracked down. Detroit motorists convicted of drunken driving or of exceeding the speed limit by more than 15 miles an hour no longer get off with mere fines. They go to jail.

The Detroit crackdown was motivated by an alarming upswing in the city's accident rate. And during the first month of the program, 308 motorists were hustled off to the House of Correction.

Has the threat of jail made Detroit's streets any safer?

"It certainly has," says Detroit Police Traffic Director, James M. Lupton. "Just travel down one and you'll see the difference."

Detroit started its campaign on May 8. From May 8 to May 31, a period of 24 days, there were only seven traffic fatalities on Detroit streets. In the 24 days preceding May 8 there had been 18!

At the same time that Detroit is getting tough with speeders and tipsy drivers, the National Committee for Traffic Safety has called upon state governors to take drastic steps to curb these two types of offenders. Accidents attributable to this man was arrested. Looking back, he's glad it did

First thing you know, I was "polluted."

When the bar closed I headed for the car. But I don't remember steering it, driving, or being arrested.

("Huff had a load, but good," says Patrolman Hofbauer. "He asked me, 'What car was I driving?' He was friendly, very nice and co-operative, but he sure had a load on.

"We had trouble starting his car at first and he offered to help. I felt sorry for him.

"We took him down to headquarters for the balloon (drunkometer) test. You know at .15 they're supposed to be drunk. Well, Huff tested .22, so you can imagine. . . .")

And so I woke up in a cell.

There's no telling what might have happened if that cop hadn't been around. People just don't know how dangerous it is to be allowed to drive when you don't know what you're doing.

Now I'm going to have enough time in jail for a week to do a lot of thinking. I'm going to straighten myself out.

And it will take a lot of straightening out. I'm in hot water with my girl and my boss. (Huff is a stock clerk for a Detroit blueprint firm. He has held the job steadily and has five years seniority.)

I was supposed to get married and have a two-week honeymoon at the end of the month. The boss, he's a swell guy, is giving me a good deal.

I'm going to spend one of the two weeks in jail, so I won't lose any pay. My girl and I were going to go to California on our honeymoon. We figured we could do it in two weeks. But we'll go to see Niagara Falls instead. Next year, I'll make it all up to her.

"A Long Time to Make It Up"

BUT IT'S GOING TO TAKE ME a long time to make it up. This is the first time I've ever done anything like this. And I was in the Navy four years. (Huff was a bosun's mate, third class, and served in the Pacific.)

She says it's going to take a long time to straighten things out.

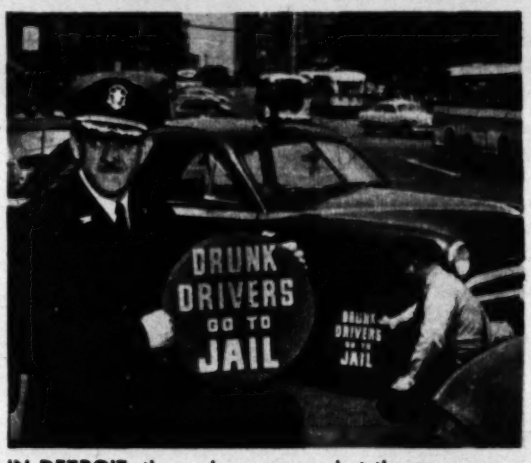
She says if nothing else happens, we'll get married as we planned.

I think I've learned my lesson. I told the judge I should go to jail. I don't think the judge was too rough. I think the sentence was light.

The judge said normally I would have got ten days but that I was honest and that I knew I was wrong.

I'll always remember being sent to jail. It'll be a heck of a long time before you catch me ever taking another drink.

FOR DRIVING while drinking: a week in jail. Huff served out his sentence working on the prison farm.

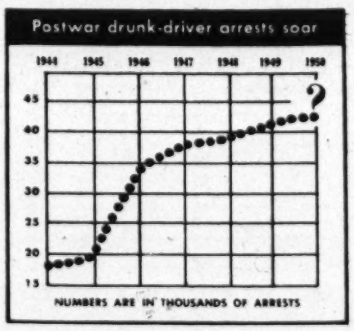


IN DETROIT, these signs mean what they say, warns the city's Police Traffic Director, James M. Lupton.

grows increasingly aware of an alarming rise in auto deaths traceable to speeders and tipsy drivers...

drunkenness and speeding, the committee warns, are increasing at a frightening rate.

Here's the reckless driving picture in some other U.S. cities:



HOUSTON:

• Harris County Sheriff's department has been cracking down on violations. Courts have been handing down $50 to $500 fines plus three to six month jail sentences for first conviction for drunken driving. In Texas, a second conviction is judged a felony, punishable by sentence to the state penitentiary.

LOS ANGELES:

• Drunken drivers fined $150 for first offense; jailed for second. Traffic injuries and fatalities have gone down during past few years due to doubling law enforcement personnel. "Visual" enforcement – with cops riding up and down streets–officials believe, is best method of control.

DENVER:

• Municipal Court traffic fines increased one-third in May this year over 1949. Municipal Judge David Brofman declares that while there has been no special campaign against violators, enforcement is strict. Fines of $100 or more are common in cases of reckless or drunken driving, and jail sentences are sometimes handed out.

BOSTON:

• Contrary to nationwide trend, there has been a decrease in drunken and reckless driving violations during first six months of this year. But police expect heavy summer traffic will send figures upward. Fines for serious violations range from $35 to $200; jail sentences are rare.

CHICAGO:

• "There has been a decided improvement in the campaign to impress upon speeders, drunken and reckless drivers that they can't get off easy," says Roger Legner, Director of Traffic Violations, Bureau of Municipal Court.

"It used to be that half of all violators were freed. Now I'd say 75 percent of them are found guilty."

A CHANCE TO WIN $1,200 is still wide open to any American of any age who can teach a frog to jump more than a total of 16 feet, four inches in three tries.

That is the unbroken record set in 1944 by a frog named Maggie. Maggie jumped in California's Calaveras County Fair in the annual event in memory of Mark Twain's classic story.

This spring, as for the last 22 years, hardened frog-jumpers showed up at frog-derby headquarters at Angels Camp in Calaveras County. As usual, they competed for the $200 first prize and $1000 bonus if they beat Maggie's achievement.

But the closest approach to Maggie's record was 14 feet 9 inches, jumped by a frog named X-100, owned by 7-year-old Malcolm Lennox of Angels Camp. Closest all-time approach was the 1938 jump of 15 feet 10 inches by a frog named Zip In. Most colorfully named was Heliotrope, winner in 1948, owned by a syndicate of University of California students.

Contestants have until next May to find a frog to beat Maggie.

It was all over in about 20 minutes. Nobody killed, nobody hurt. Damage small. Firemen rolled up hoses, lowered ladders, shooed people off the trucks and clanged away. Several hundred New Yorkers went about their business.

Cornell teaches men what to wear and how to wear it—on a budget .....

By KARL KOHRS

DO MEN get better value than women when they go shopping for clothes?

Experts at Cornell University are beginning to believe this may be true! But they also believe men often buy clothes that hurt, rather than help, their appearance. Men, they think, may learn from women how to buy for good appearance.

At Cornell, where a new course in manly appearance is popular, merchants are helping a woman professor teach men (1) how to buy good clothes; (2) how to keep clothes looking smart!

Men's Worst Mistakes

All American men (and millions of wives and sweethearts who help them buy) will be interested in what the Cornell experts say.

Three worst mistakes men make in clothes shopping are:

1. Buying the wrong size! Says Associate Prof. Margaret Humphrey: "Don't let the salesman talk you into having a big suit 'taken in.' A jacket may seem to fit well but if too much has to be taken in on the trouser waist, the suit probably was cut for an older man with a 'waistline spread.'"

2. Getting the wrong color. Few men pay enough attention to suit color—particularly in relation to overcoat and hat. A blue suit under a brown coat looks bad. But greys harmonize with almost any color.

3. Not knowing how to take care of suits at home and how to stay neat while traveling. Good luggage helps here.

How can a man know a good suit when he is shopping?

Tips on Choosing a Suit

In the first place, says Prof. Humphrey, who is on Cornell's Home Economics College staff, most men don't realize that roughly two-thirds of the cost of the suit is in the jacket. The jacket should be very closely inspected.

What do you look for in a jacket?

First, good material. But how can you recognize good cloth? This knowledge comes only with experience. Good cloth is (1) durable, (2) holds a press, (3) won't accumulate dirt, (4) has resiliency and "life."

Next, insist on quality tailoring. "Look at the buttonholes," Miss Humphrey suggests. Suits priced at $45 or more should at least have hand-tailored buttonholes. Also, inspect the underside of the collar. Hand-tailoring (or lack of it) shows there, too.

Hand-tailoring, if good, is better than machine work, Professor Humphrey says, because it puts more "give" into the garment.

When trying on a suit, she says, pay particular attention to the shoulders (see photo below). The jacket should lie flat, without that loose "horse-collar" look. Other tips:

- Give your suits a rest. Try not to wear the same one every day.
- If you have only one suit, change to slacks as soon as you get home.
- Don't press a good suit too often.
- Brush, air it outdoors, once a week.

The Haberdashery Question

Shirts can be any fabric, but special care should be paid to the fit of the collar. A long, thin neck needs a wide collar, and vice versa.

Socks: Always harmonize them with your suit. Don't wear sport socks with a business suit.

Shoes: The length is less important than a comfortable fit. Be sure that the widest part of your foot fills the widest part of the shoe.

Ties: Unless your job demands "conservative" designs, you can go all out in tie fabrics and design.

Having assembled a wardrobe, Cornell students learn how to carry it. In packing a suitcase, they're told, roll soft garments like towels and pajamas to save valuable space. And to keep suits from wrinkling, "split" trousers (see picture above) and fold them over the jacket.

What should you look for when you buy a suit?

SHOULDER fit is checked by haberdasher Irv Lewis.

LAPEL must lie flat, Lewis tells student Mike Riordan.

QUALITY of sewing can be judged by inside stitching.

BEST FOR JOB-HUNTERS: conservativ ness-like suit, quiet tie and hat win ov worn by man at right. It's too flashy and uggage, teacher-salesman at Ithaca's Sports Shop drops one bag, lets 240-pound eel on another. Common error: buying bag too large. Merchants help teach course.

JOB-HUNTERS: conservative, busi- uit, quiet tie and hat win over outfit an at right. It's too flashy and casual.

"PROF" Humphrey teaches students how to press, clean. Boy at right learned NOT to use hot iron on rayon tie. Tie melted!

HOW HAT must match individual: aver- age man (l.) wears medium crown; tall man, low crown; short man, narrow brim.

DINNER SALAD: To ½ gelatine mixture, fold in ½ cup diced cucumber, ¾ cup sliced radishes, ¼ cup sliced scallions, ½ cup diced celery.

DESSERT SALAD: To remaining half, fold in ½ cup diced peaches, ½ cup diced bananas, ½ cup red raspberries. Turn into individual molds, chill until firm.

King-Size Actress...

Dorothy Ford "grew up" to career

BY KAY SULLIVAN AND SID ROSS

IN HOLLYWOOD, where glamor abounds, Dorothy "Red" Ford has more than her share: she's Hollywood's tallest actress!

When the titian-haired actress walks along Wilshire Boulevard, pedestrians stumble over curbs gaping at her and drivers lock fenders. The reason: actress Dorothy Ford is six feet tall in her bare feet. In high heels, which she loves, she towers above most of her friends, to say nothing of most Los Angelenos. Although she wearies of remarks like "Lady, are you standing on a box?", "Red" says she likes being a "Glamazon." (She weighs 152, has a 26" waist, 36" hips and 39" bust.)

"It makes me different," she smiles. "There are a million pretty girls here but people remember me!"

The 28-year-old Californian has only one complaint: there aren't enough "tall girl" movie roles. She's worked in half-a-dozen pictures, notably "Love Laughs at Andy Hardy" and "Three Godfathers." In the latter she played the romantic lead opposite John Wayne. But too often, she says, her dialogue has been merely "Oh," or "Oooh!"

Dorothy, jitterbugging with Mickey Rooney, was hit in Andy Hardy series.

"They always want me to look ridiculous because of my size," explains Dorothy—without rancor. "But I want to play a straight role, or at least a sophisticated comedy." While waiting for a break, she has studied at Actors' Lab and lately had a night club act.

The show bug first bit Dorothy when Billy Rose hired her for his San Francisco Aquacade. From then on, she was a chorus girl, a musical comedy "elephant," a bit player.

"Now I want to act, not just ornament the background," she says wistfully.

Choe Kao and his family: to keep them alive he must work every day in the rice fields.

Formosa Farmer

Choe Kao's rice crop is his family's hold on life

THERE ARE 5,000,000 farm people like Choe Kao on Formosa, and at the time Arthur Rickerby took these pictures for PARADE, not many days ago, the Formosans were braced for the long awaited Communist attack. Choe Kao wondered: would the Reds really strike? Would his family be hurt? Meanwhile Choe Kao went on farming . . .

RICE is staff of life for farmer Choe. He and neighbors help each other on their farms.

A FARMER named Choe Kao looked up from his muddy rice paddy one day recently and watched the Kuanj-Taipei express hurdle by. It was like this every day high on the slope of Formosa's Mount Thad San. It was the war.

The eight-car express was crowded with uniforms. You looked this way – and they were coming. You looked that way – and they were going. Farmer Choe had never seen them stop at Thad San. It was no place for a war. The dying train whistle echoed above the rustle of the rice. Choe grunted and resumed digging in the mud.

It was of little matter to Choe that the uniforms on the train sometimes changed. First there had been the Japs; they had been there when he was born 38 years ago. Then there were his countrymen, the Chinese Nationalists, who had come in fields.

Choe's wife cooks family dinner of rice, sweet potato soup and turnip greens.

ONE of Choe's neighbors beats side of rice terrace to keep it from crumbling.

WHERE you find rice, you find mud. Choe's legs are covered from early morning to nightfall.

CHOE'S ELDEST son, who helps on the farm, carries water from nearby stream up to the house.

1945. The Japs were sent home. Now the troop train was rolling again.

For Choe and some five million other Formosa farmers, war brings little change in daily life. In the morning, Choe is still out in his field by six–after his warm bowl of rice – tending his two-and-one-half-acres of rice, his sweet potato, turnip and cabbage patches and his two pigs. His day is hard and long, for Choe is a family man with seven mouths to feed–he has a wife, a daughter and four sons.

A Middle-Class Farmer

By Formosan standards, Choe is neither rich nor poor. He has a cozy mud and clay house, topped with a roof of thatch. Inside, there are no partitions. A smouldering wood fire on a stone shelf marks the kitchen area. The couple's bed stands in one corner, a table and some benches in another. A rough ladder leads up to a half balcony overhead which serves as a bedroom for Choe's sons. For a window, there's simply a lone hole in the wall.

Most of the time, Choe is too busy to think about the war–except when the express thunders by. A full rice bowl is still more important to the farmer of Thad San.

CHOE'S farm is on slope of Mount Than San, 20 miles west of Formosa's capital city, Taipei.

"LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY"

Long before Christ came upon the earth, men were resorting to prayer for divine help.

The people of Israel, we know, realized the power of prayer and prayed often in appeal for God's blessing in gratitude for His favors. Almost every one instinctively feels the need for prayer in time of danger and emergency.

Many people, unfortunately, do not know how to pray properly. Even the Apostles, watching as Jesus prayed, became conscious for the first time of the mighty power of a proper prayer. They could see on the Savior's face as He prayed, the reflection of a great inner peace and refreshment.

So they said to Jesus: "Lord, teach us to pray."

And Christ replied: "Pray thus ... Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy Name.

"Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven.

"Give us this day our daily bread.

"And forgive us our debts as we also forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."

The words of the "Lord's Prayer" are enshrined, of course, in the hearts of Christians everywhere. And yet Christ, in giving us this most beautiful prayer of all, did not tell us to "Pray this." He said: "Pray thus."

He meant that we must pray with the realization that God is truly our Father ... that His Name is to be revered as no other ... that His Will is to be done here and hereafter ... that we are to be truly sorry for our injustices to others, and forgive those who injure us ... and that we are to avoid sin.

People who question the value of prayer usually say they have tried it and "it didn't work." They mean by this, of course, that God did not grant the things for which they prayed. A better understanding of proper prayer would make clear to them that petition for God's favor is only one kind of prayer ... and that God does not grant every favor which we may want or think we need.

Proper prayer is not merely a petition for blessings, but also an expression of our love, our devotion and our gratitude to God ... a declaration of our acceptance of God as our Father ... a submission of our wishes and our will to the wishes and the Will of God.

Every day ... in every land and every tongue ... a mighty chorus of prayer rises from the hearts of Catholics to honor God – to implore His blessing – to pay Him grateful thanks. For the Church teaches ... and Catholics know ... that there is no power in the hands of men so great as the power of prayer.

The most famous collection of prayers known to history is the Book of Psalms ... prayers in which God Himself teaches us clearly the dispostions with which we should pray.

FREE–To help you in your prayers, we will send you a beautifully illustrated edition of the Book of Psalms free of charge. Write today and ask for your copy of Book of Psalms No. 11–PR.

DOGGIE STUFF: Norman Thomas, who has a million anecdotes up his sleeve, once had a lawyer friend who dropped into the corner butcher shop and got into quite a conversation. "What would you do, sir," the butcher asked, "if a neighborhood dog kept coming in and stealing meat?" "Why I'd make his owner pay for it, of course," replied the lawyer. "In that case you owe me $15," the butcher said, elated, "because it's your dog." The lawyer smiled. "Fair enough," he agreed, "just deduct the $15 from the $25 you owe me for the advice!" . . .

WITH 'foster-father' Salvatore Pestretto, lost collie prepares to start life anew.

Bureau of Missing Dogs

Fido finds a friendly service in Los Angeles

WHEN A DOG leaves home in Los Angeles his owner can feel reasonably sure of getting him back—provided he has been "mugged" in advance by that city's recently organized Bureau of Missing Dogs.

The Bureau is the creation of Alexander Tilley, of the Los Angeles Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Tilley has urged all dog owners to bring their pets to the society's shelter where their descriptions and photographs are filed. Then, when strays arrive at the Bureau, they are compared with the index cards. Often this locates the owner. If not, the dog is exhibited on the Bureau's television program. If still nobody claims them, the Bureau seeks adoption homes.

Happy Dogs—and Owners

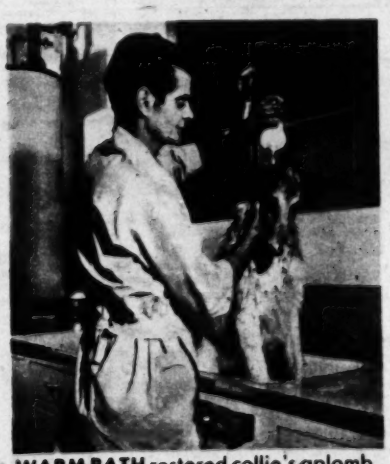
"We can't hope to get an index card on every one of the 250,000 dogs in Los Angeles," says Tilley. "But if we can get most of them catalogued, it will help us restore more lost pets to their unhappy owners—and it will make a lot of dogs happy, too!"

LOST collie was eating garbage in lot when spotted by S.P.C.A. officer.

NOTIFIED on radio, driver Dick Clithero sped to scene, picked up collie.

In "Rogues' Gallery" at Bureau of Missing Dogs, lost collie is measured for card index. Later he was photographed, curried, given a good dinner.

FREE RIDE for wanderer was provided by Clithero, who drove to bureau.



WARM BATH restored collie's aplomb, but bureau couldn't find owner in files.

So collie was exhibited on TV where Pestretto spotted him.

HE REALLY IS HOLDING HIS TEMPER IN CHECK TODAY, CLANCY! HE HASN'T THROWN A CLUB YET!

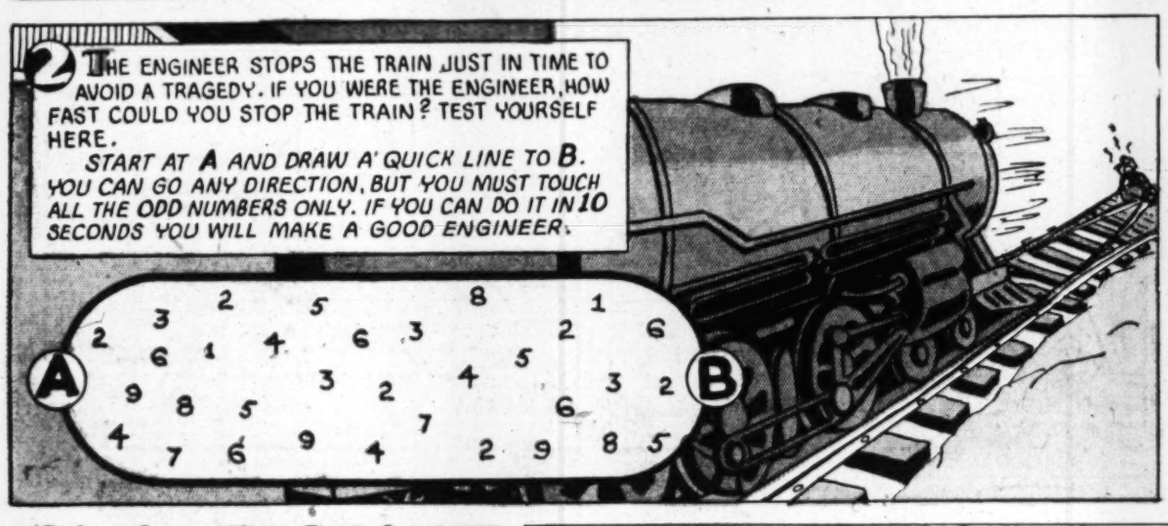
1 SPUNKY FINALLY GETS CLOSE ENOUGH TO THE ENGINEER TO BE HEARD. HE IS SO EXCITED THAT HE CANNOT PRONOUNCE HIS VOWELS. THE ENGINEER CAN UNDERSTAND SPUNKY, CAN YOU? IF YOU CAN'T, FILL IN THE NINE MISSING VOWELS.

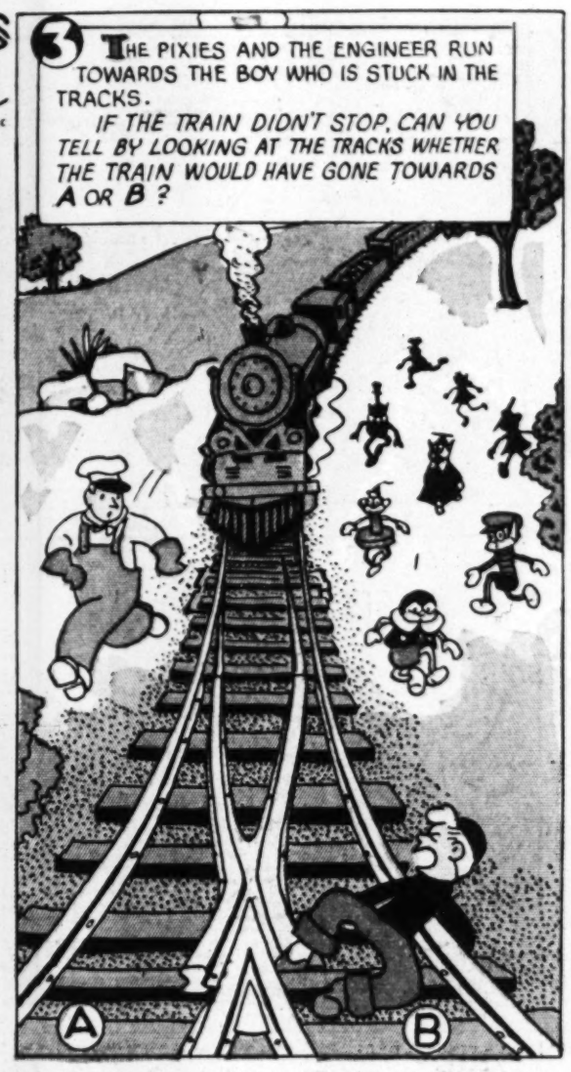
2 THE ENGINEER STOPS THE TRAIN JUST IN TIME TO AVOID A TRAGEDY. IF YOU WERE THE ENGINEER, HOW FAST COULD YOU STOP THE TRAIN? TEST YOURSELF HERE.

START AT A AND DRAW A QUICK LINE TO B. YOU CAN GO ANY DIRECTION, BUT YOU MUST TOUCH ALL THE ODD NUMBERS ONLY. IF YOU CAN DO IT IN 10 SECONDS YOU WILL MAKE A GOOD ENGINEER.



3 THE PIXIES AND THE ENGINEER RUN TOWARDS THE BOY WHO IS STUCK IN THE TRACKS.

IF THE TRAIN DIDN'T STOP, CAN YOU TELL BY LOOKING AT THE TRACKS WHETHER THE TRAIN WOULD HAVE GONE TOWARDS A OR B?



4 THE ENGINEER CARRIES THE BOY AS THE PIXIES LEAD THE WAY IN SEARCH OF A DOCTOR.

"A DOCTOR MUST LIVE THERE", THE ENGINEER SAYS AS HE POINTS TO A HOUSE THAT HAS A SMALL SIGN ON IT. "THERE'S AN M.D. AFTER THE NAME."

LOOK, VI! SEE WHAT I DUG UP IN THE CELLAR

OH, OH! IF IT ISN'T OUR OLD ICE CREAM FREEZER!

MANY'S THE QUART OF CREAM IVE MADE IN THAT!

WE HAVEN'T USED IT IN YEARS. I'D FORGOTTEN WE HAD IT

WHERE DID YOU FIND IT? IT'S ALL DUSTY

NO WONDER. IT WAS IN A DARK CORNER NEXT TO THE COAL BIN

THIS OLD ICE CREAM FREEZER SURE EARNED IT'S KEEP ESPECIALLY AT THIS TIME OF YEAR

IT WAS FINE FOR SUNDAY DESSERTS IN THE OLD DAYS

I GET SORT OF SENTIMENTAL, THINKING ABOUT 'EM

ME, TOO. I REMEMBER THOSE SUNDAYS

"IT WAS ALWAYS A HOT DAY AND FIRST I HAD TO BREAK A BIG HUNK OF ICE WITH A PICK"

"I USED TO PUT THE ICE IN A BURLAP BAG AND BREAK IT UP IN SMALL CHUNKS WITH A HAMMER"

"THEN I'D PACK THE ICE IN ROCK SALT AROUND THE CAN AND YOU'D SAY..."

BE CAREFUL NOT TO GET ANY SALT IN THE ICE CREAM, JOE. YOU DID ONCE, YOU KNOW

"AND THEN I'D START CRANKING THE THING, WITH THE TEMPERATURE ABOUT 95 DEGREES AND THE SUN ON THE BACK OF MY NECK"

JULY-16-50

"BUT WHEN WE TOOK OUT THE DASHER AND SCRAPED OFF THE ICE CREAM WITH A BIG SPOON, JUST TO SAMPLE IT...

HOW DOES IT TASTE?

WONDERFUL

WELL, I S'POSE I'LL HAVE TO PUT THE OLD THING BACK IN THE CELLAR. TOO BAD, OLD TIMER!

NOW YOU'RE THE SENTIMENTAL ONE! WOULD YOU RATHER DO ALL THAT WORK ON A HOT DAY THAN MAKE CREAM THE WAY WE DO NOW, JUST AS EASY AS ICE CUBES?

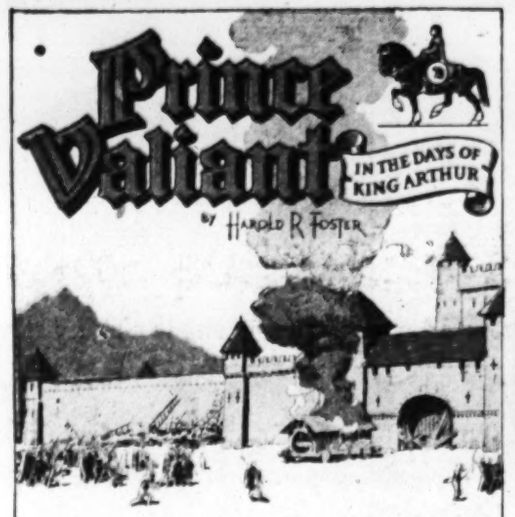
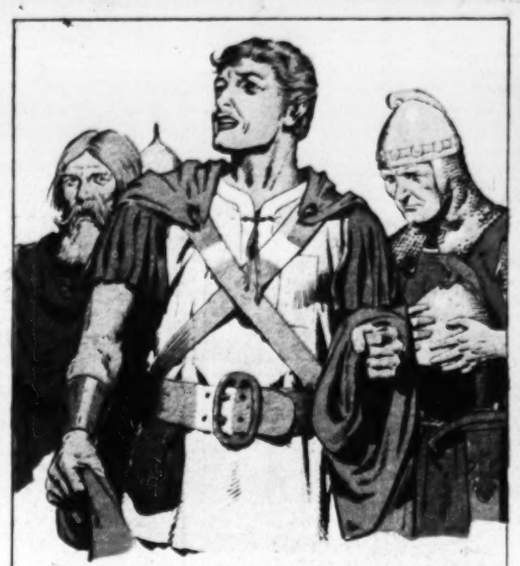
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

by Harold R Foster



Synopsis: HAP-ATLA, YOUNG KING OF THE INNER LANDS, HAS PLANNED TO STORM KING AGUAR'S STRONGHOLD AND OVERRUN ALL THULE. HIS SURPRISE ATTACK HAS FAILED TO TAKE THE GRIM AND SILENT FORTRESS, THOUGH NOT A FOE HAS BEEN SEEN!



"WHAT IS THIS MYSTERY?" HE CRIES IN DESPAIR. "AND WHERE IS THE ARMY OF THULE?" A PANTING SCOUT BRINGS HIM THE ANSWER.

"THE MEN OF THULE HAVE MARCHED AROUND US AND ARE LAYING WASTE THE INNER LANDS!"

NOW IS THE TIME FOR AGUAR TO LEAD A COUNTERATTACK AGAINST HIS CONFUSED ENEMY, BUT ALETA SAYS: "YOUR DEFEATED FOE WOULD BE FOREVER SEEKING REVENGE, AND, BESIDES, PESTILENCE HAUNTS A BATTLE-FIELD. NO, WE WILL NOT ENDANGER MY BABY'S HEALTH!"

ALETA KNOWS NOTHING OF WAR OR TACTICS BUT SHE DOES KNOW.....PEOPLE. HER PLAN IS TO REDUCE HAP-ATLA FROM AN ARROGANT YOUNG KING TO AN ORDINARY HUMAN SO SHE CAN TALK COMMON SENSE TO HIM.

IT IS SOON THEREAFTER THAT A FOEMAN FINDS A SMALL GATE STANDING AJAR AND CAUTIOUSLY ENTERS. KING AGUAR IS IN THE GARDEN, TENDING HIS ROSES!

"YOU ARE LATE," THE KING REMARKS, "BUT TAKE THAT LETTER TO YOUR MASTER. I EXPECT AN ANSWER IN THE MORNING."

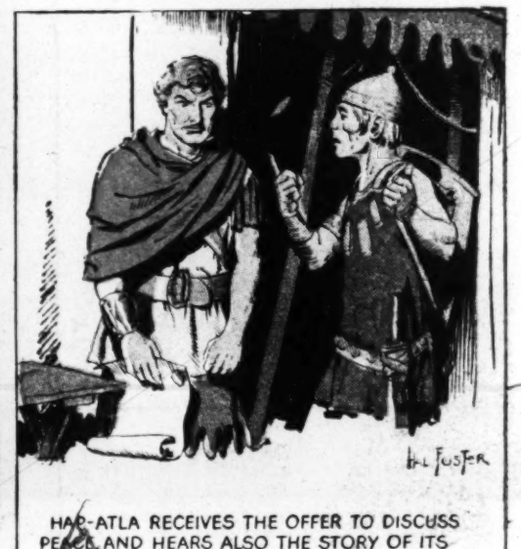
THE SOLDIER OBEYS, TOO SURPRISED TO OFFER VIOLENCE TO THE UNARMED KING.....SO FIFTY CONCEALED ARCHERS LOWER THEIR BOWS.



HAP-ATLA RECEIVES THE OFFER TO DISCUSS PEACE AND HEARS ALSO THE STORY OF ITS DELIVERY. IS KING AGUAR ALONE DEFENDING THE CASTLE? IS THERE WITCHCRAFT HERE?
